History of Bavaria.

Bavaria, called by the inhabitants Die Beyer, formed a part of the Rætia Vindelicia, and Noricum of the ancients, and received the name of Bojaria, from the Boii, a people who were settled early in this part. It had its own kings from the fifth century to the ninth, of whom the first is supposed to have been Aldiger or Aldeger, who established himself in Bavaria in 456. The present House of Bavaria is sprung from Otho I, landgrave of Wittelsbach, who was made duke of Bavaria about 1125, by the emperor Frederic I; among his successors may be reckoned three emperors of Germany, besides kings of Sweden, Denmark, and Norway, and different electors, counts, &c. Otho, surnamed the Great, was succeeded by his son Louis I, and he by his son Otho II, surnamed the Illustris, who dying in 1246, divided his possessions between his two sons, Louis II and Henry; but on the failure of issue to Henry, the whole reverted to the children of Louis, who were Rudolphus and Louis, from which descended the two great families in Germany, namely, the counts Palatine of the Rhine, from Rudolphus the Elder, and the dukes of Bavaria, from Louis the Younger. The successors of Louis, who was afterwards emperor, were Stephen, surnamed the Old, John the Pacific, Ernest, Albert III, surnamed the Pious, Albert IV, surnamed the Wise, William IV, surnamed the Constant, Albert V, surnamed the Magnanimous; William V, surnamed the Young; Maximilian I, surnamed the Solomon; Ferdinand, Mary, and Maximilian II, who was put to the ban of the empire and lost his estates, but they were restored to him by the peace of Baden. Charles Albert, his son and successor, making pretensions to the empire, was deprived of his patrimonial states, which were restored by Maria Theresa, to his son Maximilian Joseph, on his renouncing the pretensions made by his father. He died in 1777, and with him ended the younger line of the house of Wittelsbach. The next heir was Charles Theodore, count Palatine of the elder line, who had hitherto enjoyed with little interruption the electoral dignity, and at his death he was succeeded by Maximilian Joseph IV, duke of Deux-Ponts, and under whom Bavaria was raised to a kingdom during the late revolutionary war, and was aggrandized by large accessions of territory.

BAUCIS (Myth.) an infirm old woman, who, with her husband Philemon, received Jupiter hospitably in her cottage; for which the god in recompense metamorphosed their cottage into a temple, and made them the priests. Their bodies were at their death changed into trees before the doors of the temple. Ovid. Met. l. 8.

BAYEUX (Geog.) a town of Lower Normandy, in France, on the river Aure, in the modern department of Calvados, about 4 miles from the English Channel, 140 W. by N. Paris. Lon. $0^{\circ} 42'$ W. lat. $49^{\circ} 17'$ N.

History of Bayeux.

Bayeux was known to the ancients by the several names of Biducassium, Bajocæ, Civitas Bajocassium, Bajacorum, or Bellocassium. Cæsar speaks of these people under the name of Bellocisses, or Bellocasses. Ptolemy calls them Biducenses Ausonius Bajocasses; and Gregory of Tours Bajocassini. It was formerly a very considerable place, and one of the most ancient in Gaul. It suffered much from the incursions of the Normans in the 9th and 10th centuries, and afterwards still more during the wars with the English. It was taken from Berenger, count of Fessen, by Raoul, who was afterwards duke of Normandy, from which period it became a Norman town. It was taken and burnt by Henry, king of England, during the war which he carried on against his brother Robert, duke of Normandy; and it experienced a similar fate from the English in 1356. It afterwards stood two sieges, one by the English in 1415, and the other by count de Dunois in 1460; and, lastly, it was sacked and pillaged by the protestants in 1562.

Ecclesiastical History of Bayeux.

Bayeux is a bishop's see, and the first suffragan of the archbishopric of Rouen. Its first bishop was S. Euzupere, called S. Spire, who had for successors not less than eleven other bishops who were canonized. Its cathedral, which is one of the finest in Normandy, was built by Hughes de Bayeux and Odo de Conteville its bishops, who were respectively uncle and uterine brother of William the Conqueror. William Bonnet, bishop of Bayeux, held a synod here in 1300, where synodal constitutions were made, as also in another synod held by Francis Servien, bishop of the same city in 1656.

BAYEUX, John de (Ecc.) better known by the name of John d'Avanches, first bishop of Avranches, and afterwards archbishop of Rouen, one of the most distinguished prelates of his time, was killed in 1079 by some monks who were dissatisfied with his discipline.

BAYEUX, N. (Biog.) an advocate of Caen, and the translator of Ovid's Fasti, was killed in the revolutionary massacres of 1792.

both in Greek and Latin, and composed, in the latter language, in a pure and elegant style.

BAYNES (Her.) a family of Harefield-place, in Middlesex, which at present enjoys a baronetcy conferred on Sir Christopher Baynes in 1801. This family was at first established at Middlemoor, in the county of York, the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Sable, a shin-bone in fesse, surmounted of another in pale argent, on a canton of the last, a vulture proper.

Crest. A cubit-arm vested azure, cuffed ermine, the hand holding a jaw-bone argent.

Supporters. Two savages, wreathed about the head and waist, with clubs over their arms all proper.

Motto. "Furor arma ministrat."

BAYNES, Ralph (Ecc.) an English prelate, and a native of Yorkshire, was educated at John's college, Cambridge, consecrated bishop of Lichfield and Coventry in the reign of queen Mary, deprived of his bishopric in the reign of queen Elizabeth, and died in 1559. He wrote, 1. 'Prima Rudimenta in Linguam Hebraicam,' 4to. Paris. 1559. 2. 'Commentaria in Proverbia Salomonis,' fol. 1559.

BAYNES, Sir Thomas, knight (Hist.) professor of Music in Gresham college, was educated at Cambridge, and died at Constantinople in 1681, at the age of 59, leaving the munificent donation of 4000*l.* to Christ college, Cambridge.*

BAYNING (Her.) the name of a family of Essex, which enjoyed a peerage and baronetcy that became extinct in 1638. Paul Bayning, of Bently Parva, in Essex, son of Paul Bayning, sheriff of London in 1593, was created a baronet in 1612, baron Bayning of Horkesly, in Essex, in 3d Charles I., and viscount Bayning, of Sudbury, in Suffolk, in the same year. The title became extinct at the death of Anne, viscountess Bayning, aunt and heir of Paul, the second viscount; but it was revived in 1797 in the person of her descendant Charles Townshend, who was elevated to the peerage by the title of lord Bayning, of Foxley, co. Berks. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. The same as those of marquis Townshend, quartering ver; a mullet for difference.

Crest. The same also as marquis Townshend, charged with a mullet on the side of a stag.

Supporters. On the dexter-side, a stag like the marquis Townshend's, with the addition of a collar studded with mullets, and a chain pendent therefrom; on the sinister, a leopard collared with a ducal coronet and chain, on his shoulder a shield charged with the Bayning arms.

History of Bayonne.

Bayonne was known to the ancients under the name of Lapurdum, and in the Latin of the middle ages was called Bayona. It had counts or princes of its own from the 9th to the 13th century, after which it became a part of the duchy of Guienne. It was besieged in 1253 by Alfonso I., king of Arragon, and united to the crown in 1451. The inhabitants of Bayonne testified their fidelity to the crown of France in resisting the Spanish intrigues in 1597, and also at the coronation of Henry IV. Bayonne is an episcopal city suffragan of Toulouse, but is not so ancient as most other cities in France.

BAYRO, Peter de (Biog.) a physician to Charles II or III, duke of Savoy, was born in 1478, and died in 1558. His works are, 1. 'De Pestilentia ejusque Curatione,' &c. 4to.

BAZIN, Amand de Bezons (Ecc.) brother of the marshal de Bezons, was promoted to the see of Aire in 1685, to the archbishopric of Bourdeaux in 1698, to that of Rouen in 1719, and died in 1721.

BAZIN, N. (Biog.) a physician of Strasburgh, who died in 1754, was the author of 1. 'Observations sur les Plantes,' 8vo. Strasburgh, 1741. 2. 'Traité de l'Accroissement des Abeilles,' 2 vols. 12mo. 1744. 3. 'Abrégé de l'Histoire des Insectes,' 2 vols. 12mo. Paris, 1747.

BAZIRE, Claude (Hist.) a sanguinary mover of the French revolution, who suffered during the reign of Robespierre with his accomplice Danton in 1794.

BAZMAN (Hist.) and Cozad, two men famous for their valour, the first a Turk, and the second a Persian, engaged in single combat on condition that, whoever was conqueror, the victory should be granted to his nation. Bazman being killed, the king of Turkistan, who had entered Persia with an army, retired, leaving the country.

BE, William le (Biog.) an engraver and letter-founder of Troyes, died in 1598, aged 73, leaving a high reputation for skill in his art.

BEACH, Thomas (Biog.) a poet who died by his own hand in 1737. He wrote 'Eugenio, or Virtuous and Happy Life.'

BEACON, Thomas (Biog.) or Becon, one of the English reformers, a native of Suffolk, was educated at Cambridge, where he took his degree A. B. in 1530, and died prebend of Canterbury about 1570. He wrote, 1. 'Contra Dominum et Missæ Papisticæ Comparatio,' 8vo. Basil. 1559. 2. 'The Reliques of Rome,' 12mo. 1563; and other treatises on the same subject.

BEALE, Robert (Hist.) or Belus, a lawyer and an exile in the time of Mary on account of his religion, was, on his return to England, sent ambassador in 1576 to the prince of Orange, and afterwards was chosen to convey the warrant for beheading Mary, queen of Scots, which he read on the scaffold, and was a witness of its execution. He died in 1601. Among his works, as an author, the principal is his 'Rerum Hispanicarum Scriptores,' 2 vols. fol. Francof. 1579.

BEALE, Mary, a portrait-painter, and also a poet, was born in 1632, and died in 1697, leaving many specimens of her skill in the portraits of Tillotson, Stillingfleet, Patrick Wilkins, &c. which are preserved at Melbury, the seat of the earl of Ilchester, in Dorsetshire. The version of some of the psalms in Dr. S. Woodford's translation was from her pen.

BEARCROFT, Philip (Biog.) master of the Charter-house, was also author of an 'Historical Account of Thomas Sutton, esq., and his Foundation in the Charter-house.'

BEARD, John (Biog.) a favourite singer and actor on the English stage, was born in 1717, and died in 1791 universally respected.

BEARHAVEN, Viscount (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Bantry.

BEARN (Geog.) a province of old France, at the foot of the Pyrenees; which separates it from the Spanish Navarre and Arragon. It is at present included in the department of the Lower Pyrenees.

History of Bearn.

Bearn, in the Latin Beneurnia, formerly bore the title of a principality, and had its own princes for many centuries. Louis the Debonnaire having exiled Loup Centule, duke of Gascony, gave Bearn in fief to one of the sons of this duke in reward for his fidelity under the title of viscount. Among his successors were Centule III, who was assassinated in 1012; Centule IV, who was also assassinated; Gaston V, who went on the crusades in 1099; Centule V, who was killed in battle against the Moors; and William, who was killed in battle against the Moors in 1229. This principality afterwards passed into the house of Foix, and in 1620 it was united to the crown by Louis XIII.

BEATON, (Hist.) Beton, or Bethune, James, archbishop of St. Andrews in the reign of James V, is distinguished by his enemies for his zeal against heretics, one of whom, Patrick Hamilton, is styled the protomartyr of Scotland; but he is more kindly remembered by the learned as the founder of New college in the university of St. Andrews. He died in 1539.

BEATON, David, nephew of the preceding cardinal, archbishop of St. Andrews, was born in 1491, educated in the university of St. Andrews, appointed resident at the court of France in 1719, created cardinal by Paul III in 1538, succeeded his uncle in the archbishopric in 1539, and was assassinated by James Melvil and other conspirators in 1546, after having taken an active part in all the troubles of the times, and drawn upon himself a host of enemies by his violent opposition to heretics and rebels. [Vide Plate XI]

BEATON, James, another nephew of James Beaton, was promoted to the archbishopric of Glasgow in 1552; but, leaving Scotland at the reformation in 1560, he carried away all the records of his cathedral, which he presented to the Scotch college at Paris. He died in France ambassador from king James VI in 1603. He is said to have written, 1. 'A Lamentation for the Kingdom of Scotland.' 2. 'A Book of Controversies against the Sectaries,' &c.; but none of these have been printed.

BEATRIX (Hist.) daughter of Renaud, count of Burgundy, and wife of Frederic I, is said to have been insulted by the people of Milan, in consequence of which the emperor raised the city to the ground, leaving nothing but the churches.

BEATRIX, the name of several other princesses: as Beatrice, queen of Naples, the wife of Charles, king of Naples and Sicily; Beatrice, countess of Provence; Beatrice, duchess of Savoy in 1521; Beatrice of Castille, wife of Alphonso V, king of Portugal, &c.

BEATTIE, James (Biog.) a Scotch poet, philosopher, and critic, was born in 1735, and died in 1803. He wrote, 1. 'Original Poems and Translations,' 1761. 2. 'The Judgment of Paris,' 4to. 1765. 3. 'Essay on the Nature and Immutability of Truth,' 8vo. 1770; in opposition to scepticism and infidelity, of which five large editions were in four years. 4. 'The First Book of the Minstrel,' 1770, which ran through four editions in a short time, and was followed in 1774 by a 'Second Book.' 5. 'Essays on Poetry and Music,' &c. 8vo. 1776. 6. 'Dissertations, Moral and Critical, on Memory and Imagination,' &c. 4to. 1783. 7. 'Evidences of the Christian Religion briefly stated,' 2 vols. 12mo. 1784. 8. 'Elements of Moral Science,' 2 vols. 8vo. 1790 and 1793. 9. 'Life and Character of James Hay Beattie,' his son, together with the essays and fragments written by the latter. [Vide Plate XXXIX]

BEATUS (Biog.) vide Rhenanus.

BEAU, John Baptiste le (Biog.) a Jesuit and antiquary, was born in 1602, and died in 1670. His works are, 1. 'Diatriba Dux,' &c. 8vo. Tolos. 1637, inserted in Graevius's Roman Antiquities, Vols. V and VIII. 2. 'Diatriba de Pharsalici Conflictus Mense et Die,' &c. 8vo. Wirtemb. 1705. 3. 'Breviculum Expeditio Hispaniensis,' &c. 4to. Tolos. 1642. 4. 'Otia Regia Ludovici XIV. Regis Christianissimi,' &c. 8vo. Clermont. 1655; Francof. 1661. 5. 'La Vie de M. Francois d'Estaing, Evêque de Rhodéz,' 4to. Clermont, 1655, &c.

BEAU, Charles le (Biog.) secretary to the duke of Orleans, and perpetual secretary to the Academy of Inscriptions, was born in 1706, and died in 1778. He wrote a History of the Lower Empire, in 22 vols. 12mo. 1757; forming a continuation of Crevier's Roman Emperors. His 'Opera Latina,' were edited by Thierat, in 2 vols. 8vo. 1782.

BEAU, John Lewis le, younger brother to the above, was born in 1721, and died in 1766. He published an edition of Homer, Gr. and Lat. 2 vols. 1746; and 'Ciceronis Orationes,' with annotations, in 3 vols. 1753.

BEAUCAIRE, de Peguilon Francis (Ecc.) in Latin Belcarinus Peguilio, preceptor to cardinal de Lorraine, and bishop of Metz, was born in 1514, and died in 1591. He wrote, among other things, 'Rerum Gallicarum Commentaria, ab An. 1462, usque ad An. 1566,' fol. Lugd. 1625.

BEAUCHAMP, John (Hist.) chamberlain to king Richard II, by whom he was created baron of Beauchamp and Kidderminster, was beheaded by the barons on a charge of maladministration.

BEAUCHAMP, Richard, earl of Warwick, and a brave general, was born in 1381, and died in 1439, after having signified himself in many engagements, and been honoured with the highest marks of distinction by the different kings whom he served, particularly by Henry V.

BEAUCHAMP, Henry, son of the preceding, and earl of Warwick, was crowned by Henry VI. in 1445, king of the islands of Wight, Guernsey, and Jersey; but the title became extinct at his death, two years after.

BEAUCHAMP (Her.) the name of an illustrious family, whose ancient residence was at Beauchamp's Court. Walter de Beauchamp, or, as it is written in their pedigree, William de Beauchamp, had several sons, of whom the eldest was William de Beauchamp, lord Beauchamp, earl of Worcester and Warwick, baron of Elmsley, who was the ancestor of Guy, earl of Warwick. Walter Beauchamp, from whom the present family is descended, was the second son of the aforesaid Walter or William de Beauchamp, earl of Worcester, and baron of Elmsley in the time of Henry III. From this Walter de Beauchamp of the second house, came sir John Beauchamp, of Powick, knight, who was created lord Beauchamp, of Powyke, in 25 Henry VI. At the death of his son and heir, sir Richard, second lord Beauchamp, of Powyke, without male issue, the title became extinct, but was revived in the person of William Lygon, who was descended from Anne Beauchamp, daughter of the second lord Beauchamp. He was raised to the dignity of a baron in 1806, and to those of a viscount and earl in 1815. From a brother of the said Walter, issued, in a female line, the lady Margaret, countess of Richmond and Derby, mother of Henry VII.

BEAUCHAMP, Lord St. Amand, a title conferred in 1448, on Walter de Beauchamp, younger son of John, lord Beauchamp, at the death of whose son, the second lord St. Amand, without legitimate issue, in 1508, the title became extinct.

BEAUCHAMP (Geog.) a country near Calais, in Picardy, from which the dukes of Somerset took part of their title.

BEAUCHAMPS, Pierre François Godard de (Biog.) a miscellaneous writer, was born at Paris in 1689, and died in 1761. He wrote, 1. 'The Loves of Ismène and Isménide,' 8vo. 1743; a free translation of a Greek romance, 8vo. 1743, and 4to. Paris, 1796. 2. 'The Loves of Rhodantes and Docicles,' another Greek romance, by Theodoros Prodromus, 12mo. 1748. 3. 'Recherches sur la Theatre de France,' 4 vols. 8vo. 1735; and 3 vols. 8vo. 4. 'Lettres d'Héloise et d'Abailard,' in French verse; besides some theatrical performances, &c.

BEAUCHAMPS, Joseph, an astronomer, was born in 1752, and died in 1801. His writings are to be found in the 'Journal des Savans' for 1782, and the following years, to 1790.

BEAUCHATEAU, Francis Matthew Chatelet de (Biog.) was considered a poet at eight years of age, and published his poems at the age of twelve, under the title of 'La Lyre du Jeune Apollon.' He came into England, and, as is supposed, travelled into Persia, after which nothing further was heard of him.

BEAUCHATEAU, Hippolytus Castelet de, brother of the preceding, an ecclesiastic, and an adventurer, came into England under a false name, and gained many friends by a pretended recantation of his faith, but is supposed to have died in obscurity.

BEAUCLERC, Charles de (Hist.) secretary of state during the regency of Maria de Medicis, mother of Louis XIII, died in 1630, aged 70, after having been 50 years in the service of the state.

BEAUCLERC, Charles, natural son of Charles II, was born in 1670, and died in 1726, and having distinguished himself both in a civil and military capacity, in the reigns of Charles II, James II, William and Anne. He was among the first that went over to the prince of Orange in the West.

BEAUCLERC, Lord Vere, created lord Vere, of Hamworth, third son of the preceding, distinguished himself on several occasions as a naval commander, and died in 1781.

BEAUCLERC (Her.) the name given to the natural son of Charles II, above-mentioned, who was raised to the dignity of duke of St. Albans. [Vide Albans]

BEAVER (Biog.) or Bever, John, and in Latin Fiber, Castor, and Castorius, a Benedictine in Westminster Abbey, in the 14th century, wrote a 'Chronicle of the British and English Affairs,' now among the Cottonian MSS.; also 'De Rebus Canobii Westmonasteriensis,' &c.

BEAVER, a monk of St. Albans, who left some treatises, which are in the king's library.

BEAUFILS, William (Biog.) was born in 1674, and died in 1758, leaving, among other things, 'Letters on the Government of Religious Houses,' 12mo. Paris, 1740.

BEAUFORT, Henry (Hist.) second son of John of Gaunt, by Catherine Swinford, was appointed lord high chancellor in 1404, made bishop of Winchester in 1405, sent on an embassy into France in 1414, created cardinal by Martin V, in 1427, and legate both in England and Germany, and general of the crusade against the Hussites, in 1428, and died in 1447, about a month after his adversary, Humphrey, duke of Gloucester, in whose murder he was suspected of having been an accessory. He founded the celebrated hospital of St. Cross, in Winchester, and finished the magnificent cathedral of Winchester, which was left incomplete by his predecessor, and performed many other public acts of munificence.

BEAUFORT, Margaret, the foundress of Christ's and St. John's Colleges, in Cambridge, the only daughter and heir of John Beaufort, duke of Somerset. [Vide Beaufort, under Heraldry] and of Margaret Beauchamp, was born in 1441, married in 1456 Edmund, earl of Richmond, by whom she had king Henry VII, and died in 1509, after having had two other husbands, namely, sir Henry Stafford, and Thomas, lord Stanley, earl of Derby. By her marriage, according to bishop Fisher, with the earl of Richmond, and by her birth, she was allied to thirty kings and queens, within the fourth degree of either blood or affinity. Besides the foundation of the two colleges at Cambridge, before-mentioned, she left salaries for two divinity lecturers, one at Oxford and the other at Cambridge; as also for a grammar-school at Wymborn, and other foundations in support of learning, of which she was not altogether deficient herself, as appears from some of her works, namely, 1. 'The Mirroure of Gold for the Sinful Soule,' translated from the French version of a book, entitled, 'Speculum Aureum Peccatorum.' 2. A translation of the fourth book of Gerson's treatise, entitled, 'Of the Imitation and Following the Blessed Life of our Most Merciful Saviour Jesus Christ,' printed at the end of Dr. Atkinson's English translation of the three first books, 1504. 3. A Letter to her Son, printed in Howard's 'Collection of Letters.' [Vide Plate XII]

BEAUFORT, Francis Vendome, Duke de, son of Caesar, duke of Vendome, was born at Paris in 1616, and was at the siege of Candia in 1669, where he distinguished himself, as he had done on former occasions.

BEAUFORT (Her.) the name given by John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, and third son of Edward III, to all the children which he had by Catherine Swinford, first his mistress, and afterwards his wife, who were all legitimated by act of Parliament in 1396, and so called from Beaufort Castle, in the county of Anjou, the place of their nativity. The eldest son, John Beaufort, was created earl of Somerset, and his grandson, John, was created duke of Somerset. The nephew of this latter, who was the third duke of Somerset, left a natural son, sir Charles Somerset, afterwards earl of Worcester, whose descendant, Henry, the fifth earl, was created marquis of Worcester in 1642, and his descendant, Henry, third marquess, was created duke of Beaufort in 1682. The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Somerset, duke of Beaufort, marquess and earl of Worcester, earl of Glamorgan, viscount Grosmont, baron Herbert, lord of Ragland, Chepstow, and Gower, baron Beaufort of Caldecot Castle, all in the county of Monmouth, and baron Bottecourt.

BEAUFREMONT, Henry de, son of the preceding, died of the wounds he received at the siege of Royan, in 1622.

BEAUFREMONT, Claude de (Ecc.) bishop of Troyes, succeeded Anthony Caraccioli in that see, who had renounced his charge to embrace Calvinism. Beaufremont died in 1593, aged 64.

BEAUJEU (Hist.) an ancient and noble house in France, which took its name from a small town in the district of Beaugolois, about three leagues from the Soane.

BEAULIEU, Augustin de (Hist.) commonly styled General Beaulieu, died in 1687, aged 48, after having been engaged for many years in active service at sea.

BEAULIEU, Simon (Ecc.) a native of Beaulieu, was made archbishop of Bourges in 1281, created a cardinal by Celestin V in 1295, and died in 1297, after having been employed on many important occasions by Martin V, Celestin V, and Boniface VIII.

BEAULIEU, Earl (Her.) the title conferred on Edward Hussey, esq., who was created a peer by the title of lord Beaulieu, of Beaulieu, in Hampshire, in 1753, and in 1784 was elevated to the dignity of an earl. His titles expired at his death.

BEAUMANOIR, John de (Hist.) marshal of France, &c. of a noble house in the province of Maine, was born in 1551, and died in 1614, after having passed his life in the service of Henry IV and Louis XIII.

BEAUMARCHAIS, Peter Augustin Caron de (Biog.) a dramatic writer, was born at Paris in 1732, and died in 1799, after a life of bustle and intrigue, divided between literature, politics, and commerce. His works were collected in 7 vols. 8vo. in 1809.

BEAUMELLE, Laurence Angliviel de la (Biog.) a French writer, was born in 1727, and died in 1773. His principal work was 'Memoires de Madame de Maintenon,' 6 vols. 12mo. 1756.

BEAUMONT (Hist.) the name of several noble houses in France.

BEAUMONT, Amblard de, of the house of Beaumont, in Dauphiny, was employed in many important missions by the kings John, Charles, and Francis, for which he received many honours.

BEAUMONT, Francis de Baron des Adrets, distinguished himself on many occasions as a military commander in the reign of Charles IX, and afterwards in the service of the Hugonots, out of revenge to the duke of Guise, and died in 1587.

BEAUMONT, Henry, son of Lewis de Brienne, viscount of Beaumont sur Oire, and grandson of John de Brienne, king of Jerusalem, came over to England, as is said, in the train of Isabel, queen of Edward II, was sent in 18 Edward II as one of the ambassadors to treat of peace with Charles, king of France, and died in 14 Edward III, after having obtained considerable grants of lands and honours.

BEAUMONT, John, the fifth in descent, lost his life in the battle of Northampton, in 38 Henry VI, after having been raised to the dignity of a viscount, in consideration of his services, and those of his ancestors.

BEAUMONT, Sir John, Bart., son of Sir John Beaumont, suffered much in the cause of Charles I, both in his estate and his person, and was killed at the battle of Gloucester, in 1644. His father, sir John, the poet, is mentioned under Biography. His brother sir Thomas, his heir, was also a great sufferer from the rebels.

BEAUMONT, Raoul de (Ecc.) archbishop of Rouen in the 11th century, was sent into England on a mission to Henry II, respecting the affair of Thomas a Becket.

BEAUMONT, Hardouin de, archbishop of Paris, wrote a history of Henry IV, for the use of Louis XIV, to whom he was preceptor.

BEAUMONT, Viscount (Her.) the title conferred on John, sixth lord Beaumont, as before-mentioned under History, which had hitherto not been a usual title in England. At the death of William, second viscount, and seventh lord Beaumont, without issue, in 24 Henry VII, the titles became extinct. Francis viscount Lovel, son to Joane, his sister, would have been his heir if he had not been attainted at that time. The barony of Beaumont was in consequence in abeyance, but was granted in 1796 to Thomas Stapleton, esq. on his second petition to the House of Lords, which decided in his favour.

BEAUMONT, the name of a family of Cole-Orton, Grace-Dieu, and Stoughton-Grange, in the county of Leicester, descended from sir Thomas Beaumont, second son of John, fourth lord Beaumont, before-mentioned, which at present enjoys a baronetcy. Sir Thomas Beaumont, who was a loyal subject in the time of the rebellion, was created a baronet in 1619, and afterwards viscount Beaumont; but the baronetage and peerage failing at his death, the former was revived in the person of sir Thomas Beaumont, second son of Nicholas Beaumont, who was created a baronet in 1660. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. France ancient (azure semée de fleurs de lis) and a lion rampant or.

Crest. On a chapeau azure, fleurs de lis or, turned up ermine, a lion passant or.

Motto. "Erectus, non clatus."

BEAUMONT, Marquis, the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the duke of Roxburgh.

BEAUMONT, Sir John (Biog.) son of Francis Beaumont, one of the judges of the Common Pleas in the reign of queen Elizabeth, was born at Grace-Dieu in 1548, educated at Oxford, created a baronet in 1626, and died in 1628. His son, sir John, took an active part in the royal cause against the rebels, but is better known as a poet. Besides his works in the 'English Poets,' other poems of his were published in 1629, under the title of 'Bosworth Field,' &c.; and Anthony Wood ascribes to him a poem in eight books, entitled 'The Crown of Thorns.'

BEAUMONT, Francis, brother of the preceding, was born in 1586, admitted of Broadgate's hall, now Pembroke college, in 1596, and afterwards a student of the Inner Temple, and died in 1615. He was the friend and partner of Fletcher in dramatic compositions, which have acquired great celebrity. The share which each took in these works, as far as it can be ascertained, may be best learnt from the edition in 10 vols. 8vo. in 1778. His poems appeared first in 4to. in 1640, and again in 1653.

BEAUMONT, Joseph, a descendant of the same family, successively master of Jesus college, and Peter-house, Cambridge, died in his 84th year in 1699. He was the author of 'Psyche,' an allegorical poem, displaying the intercourse between Christ and the soul, 1647, besides observations of a controversial nature on Dr. More's 'Mystery of Godliness.'

BEAUNE, James de (Hist.) of a noble family originally from the city of Tours, minister of the finances under Francis I, suffered death in 1527, under an unjust charge of peculation.

History of Beauvais.

Beauvais, known to the ancients by the names of Bellovacum, Bellovacii, Bratuspantium, and Cesariomagus, surrendered to Caesar, and remained in the hands of the Romans until it was reduced by Clovis, since which time it has remained so faithful to the French that it has never been taken, whence it has acquired the name of La Pucelle. The English besieged it without success in 1443, and Charles, duke of Burgundy, also attacked it in 1472, with an army of 80,000 men, but with no better success. The county of Beauvais formed a part of Vermandois.

Ecclesiastical History of Beauvais.

Beauvais before the revolution was a bishop's see, suffragan of Rheims, and, as is supposed, St. Lucian was the first bishop; but nothing is known for a certainty respecting this see before the eighth or ninth centuries. Among the number of its bishops may be distinguished Warin, Philippe de Dreux, John de Marigni, Philippe d'Alençon, &c. but in the time of the civil wars about religion, Odet, cardinal de Chantillon, took the side of the Protestants.

BEAUVAU (Hist.) an ancient and illustrious house of France, which was originally from Anjou, is said by authors to have descended from the ancient counts of Anjou.

BEAUVAU, John de, rendered great service to Louis I and II.

BEAUVAU, Peter de, son of the preceding, was sent by Louis III as ambassador in 1429, to treat of his marriage with Margaret, of Savoy.

BEAUVAU, Louis Anthony, second son of Louis, marquis de

Beauvais, was killed while making himself master of the covered way of Ypres in 1744, to the great regret of Louis XV, in whose service he had distinguished himself.

BEAUVAU, John de (Ecc.) of the same family, was promoted to the see of Angers in 1447, but having fallen under the displeasure of Louis XI, and the pope Paul II, he was deposed in 1465, but restored in 1472, and died in 1479.

BEAUVAU, Giles John Francis de, was promoted to the bishopric of Nantes in 1679, and died in 1717, after having made statutes for the regulation of his diocese.

BEAUVAU, René Francis de, was made bishop of Bayonne in 1700, translated to Tournai in 1707, appointed to the archbishopric of Toulouse in 1713, and to that of Narbonne in 1719, and died in 1739.

BELGIUS (Hist.) the third king of the ancient Gauls, according to Berosus.

BELGIUS, a Gaulish captain, made himself very formidable to the Illyrians and Macedonians. He likewise defeated Ptolemy Ceraunus; and, having taken him prisoner, the Gauls cut off his head, and stuck it on a lance, in the 124th Olympiad; soon after which Belgius was killed. Polyb. l. 2; Justin. l. 24; Paus. l. 2.

BELGRADE (Geog.) a famous fortress of European Turkey in Servia, near the conflux of the Save, and the Danube, 150 m. S. S. E. Buda, 440 N. W. Constantinople. Lon. 20° 10' E. lat. 44° 43' N.

History of Belgrade.

Belgrade, in the Latin of the middle ages Alba Græca, or Alba Bulgarica, is supposed to have been the ancient Taurinum, or to have been built very near the site of this city. It was sold by the despot of Servia to Hungary, and was besieged, but without any effect, by Amurath II and Mahomet II in 442 and 1456. Solymán II at length made himself master of it in 1522, from whom it was retaken by the Imperialists under the elector of Bavaria in 1688, but again lost in 1690. It remained with the Turks until 1717, when it surrendered by capitulation to prince Eugene, and was secured to the emperor by the peace of Paparowitz. In 1739 it was again surrendered to the Turks on condition that the new fortifications erected by the Austrians should be demolished; but in 1789 it was retaken by the Imperialists under Marshal Loudon, but restored to the Turks by the peace of 1791. In the year 1806 the Servian insurgents laid siege to Belgrade, which, after many fruitless efforts, they succeeded in carrying. The bishop's see, which was formerly erected here, is removed to Semendria.

BENEVENTO (Geog.) a city of Italy, included in the kingdom of Naples, but in reality the capital of a duchy of the same name, which belongs to the states of the church. It is situated on a declivity near the confluence of the Sabato, and Caloro, 35 m. N. E. Naples, lon. 14° 47' E., lat. 41° 8' N.

History of Benevento.

This town, which contains more vestiges of antiquity, with the exception of Rome, than any other city of Italy, was a Roman colony by the name of Beneventum. It was ruined by Totila in 545, and afterwards repaired by the Lombards, by whom it was erected into a duchy. Charlemagne conquered it in 787. In 1053 the emperor Henry III gave this duchy to the pope Leo IX, since which time it has always belonged to the holy see. It has suffered greatly by earthquakes, particularly in 1688, when the pope Benedict XIII, then its archbishop, was dug out of the ruins of his palace. The antiquities of this place, which are exceedingly numerous, and in good preservation, have been described by Giovanni de Vita, in his work entitled 'Antiquitates Beneventanæ.' In a plain near this town Charles of Anjou, king of Naples, defeated and killed his rival Manfred, in 1266.

Ecclesiastical History.

Benevento has been the see of an archbishop since the year 969, and reckons St. Januarius among the number of its metropolitans. It likewise gave birth to the popes Felix IV, and Gregory VIII. In 1087 pope Victor III held a council here, at which the antipope Gilbert was excommunicated with his adherents. Urban II held another on the same subject in 1091.

BENEVENTUM (Geog.) a town of the Hirpini, built by Diomedes, 28 miles from Capua. Its name was changed from Maleventum to Beneventum, when it became a Roman colony, and is now known by the name of Benevento. [Vide Benevento] This town assisted the Romans against Annibal, by whom it was almost destroyed. Liv. l. 9, c. 27, &c.; Plin. l. 3, c. 11; Solin. c. 8.

BENÉZET, Anthony (Biog.) an American, who died in 1784, was the author of 'A Caution to Great Britain and her Colonies,' in a short representation of the calamitous state BERING, Vitus (Hist.) vide Beering.

BERING, Vitus (Biog.) a Latin poet, and native of Denmark, was born in 1617, and died in 1675. His poetry was collected in the second volume of 'Deliciæ quorundam Danorum,' 12mo. Lugd. Bat. 1693; besides which, in his character of historiographer to the king, he published 'Florus Danicus, sive Danicarum Rerum a Primordio Regni ad Tempora usque Christiani I,' fol. 1698; republished with the fresh dates of 1700 and 1709.

BERINGHEN, Henry (Hist.) son of Peter Beringhen, of the duchy of Cleves, served Louis XIII as governor of Marseilles, and in various other capacities, and after having been banished from France, through the intrigues of Richelieu, was restored to favour, and died in 1692, aged 89.

BERKELEY, Thomas de (Hist.) son of Maurice de Berkeley, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, distinguished himself in the service of Edward I and Edward II, in all the wars of that time, and was taken prisoner at the fatal battle of Bannockburne.

BERKELEY, Maurice, first lord Berkeley, delighted in arms from his youth, and was engaged in all the wars of that time, as also in several tournaments. He joining with Thomas Plantagenet, earl of Lancaster, was taken prisoner and sent to Wallingford, where he died in 1326.

BERKELEY, Sir Thomas, son of the preceding, and second lord Berkeley, had for some time the custody of the unfortunate king Edward II. He was afterwards constantly in the service of Edward III, whom he attended into France, and was at the battle of Cressy, in 1346, and that of Poitiers, under the Black Prince, where he took so many prisoners, that with their ransom he rebuilt Beverstone Castle, in Gloucestershire.

BERKELEY, Sir Maurice, his son, and third lord Berkeley, was much wounded at the battle of Poitiers.

BERKELEY, Thomas, fourth lord Berkeley, took an active part in all concerns, both civil and military, in the reign of Richard II and Henry IV, in which latter reign he burnt 15 sail of French ships, which were sent to the assistance of Owen Glendourwy, and took the seneschal of France, with eight officers, prisoners. He died in 1416.

BERKELEY, Maurice, eighth lord Berkeley, attended the lady Mary, daughter of Henry VII, into France, on her marriage with Louis XII.

BERKELEY, Thomas, ninth lord Berkeley, had a command in the English army in 1513, at the celebrated battle of Flodden, and for his gallantry there received the honour of knighthood from Thomas Howard, earl of Surrey. He was one of the lords who subscribed the letter to Clement VII, importuning him to give his definitive sentence in that cause of matrimony touching the king and queen Catherine.

BERKELEY, Sir John, of Bruton, descended from a younger son of Maurice lord Berkeley, of Berkeley Castle, who died in 1326, distinguished himself for his loyalty to Charles I, and in reward thereof was created lord Berkeley, of Stratton, in 1678.

BERKELEY, Sir Robert, one of the justices of the King's Bench in the time of Charles I, and the second son of Rowland Berkeley, esq. of Spetchley, in Worcestershire, descended by the female line from Thomas Mowbray, was not less distinguished for his loyalty than his birth. He was one of the eleven brethren who gave his opinion in favour of ship-money, and on that account was singled out by the rebels as a particular object of their vengeance. After being fined 20,000*l.*, and his house burnt down to the ground, he converted his stables into a dwelling-house, and living contentedly on the wreck of his fortune, died in 1666.

BERKELEY, Sir William, of the same family, distinguished himself as vice-admiral in the dreadful engagement with the Dutch, in 1666, when he led the van, and fell in his cabin, overpowered with numbers.

BERKELEY, Sir William, youngest son of sir Maurice Berkeley, and brother of John lord Berkeley, of Stratton above-mentioned, was sent as governor to Virginia by Charles I, whither he invited many of the royalists during the rebellion. He was deprived of his government by the rebels, but restored to it again in 1660. He returned to England in 1676, and died in 1677. His writings are, 1. 'The Lost Lady,' a tragic comedy, fol. London, 1689. 2. 'Description of Virginia,' fol.

BERKELEY, George, first earl of Berkeley, and thirteenth lord Berkeley, contributed greatly to the restoration, for which he was rewarded by Charles II, with the additional dignities of a viscount and an earl. He was of the privy council in the reigns of Charles II, James II, and William III, and died in 1698. This nobleman made a present of the valuable library collected by sir Robert Coke, to Sion College; and left, as a memorial of his piety, a work entitled, 'Historical Applications and occasional Meditations upon several Subjects, written by a Person of Honour,' 12mo. 1670; wherein are given the testimonies of many eminent men in favour of a religious life, and the consolations of religion in the hour of death. A third edition of this work was published in 1680.

BERKELEY, Charles, the second earl of Berkeley, went in 1689 in quality of envoy-extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the States of Holland; in 1699 was appointed one of the lords justices of Ireland, and died in 1710, after holding several high posts in the reign of queen Anne.

BERKELEY, James, third earl of Berkeley, vice-admiral of the blue, distinguished himself in many gallant actions at sea, in the reign of queen Anne; and after serving king George I as first lord of the Admiralty, custos rotulorum, &c. died in 1736.

BERKELEY, George (Ecc.) an Irish prelate, son of William Berkeley, of Thomastown, in the county of Kilkenny, whose family having suffered for their loyalty to Charles I, went over to Ireland after the restoration, and there obtained the collectorship of Belfast. He was born in 1684, educated at Dublin, promoted to the see of Cloyne in 1733, and died in 1753; of whom Atterbury declared "That he did not think so much understanding, so much knowledge, so much innocence, and so much humility, had been the portion of any but angels, until he saw Mr. Berkeley." His principal works are, 1. 'Arithmetica absque Algebra, aut Euclide Demonstrata,' 1707. 2. 'Theory of Vision,' 1709. 3. 'The Principles of Human Knowledge,' 1710. 4. 'Dialogues between Hylas and Philonous.' 5. 'Three Sermons in Favour of Passive Obedience and Non-resistance,' 1712, which went through three editions. 6. 'A Proposal for converting the Savage Americans to Christianity,' &c. 1725. 7. 'The Minute Philosopher,' 2 vols. 8vo. 8. 'The Analyst,' written against the doctrine of fluxions and mathematics in general as favourable to infidelity; which gave rise to a controversy, in which the bishop answered his objectors in a tract, entitled, 'A Defence of Free-thinking in Mathematics,' 1735. 9. 'The Querist,' 1735. 10. 'A Discourse addressed to Magistrates,' 1736. 11. 'Siris; a Chain of Philosophical Reflections and Enquiries concerning the Virtues of Tar Water,' 1744 and 1747; which was followed by 'Further Thoughts on Tar Water,' 1752. In 1784 a new edition of the bishop's entire works was published in 2 vols. 4to. Dublin and London.

BERKELEY (Her.) the original name of this family, of which many distinguished members have been noticed under History, was Fitzhardinge, which was changed for that of Berkeley, from Berkeley Castle, their seat, in the county of Gloucester, which, Robert Fitzhardinge, a powerful man in his time, obtained from Henry, duke of Normandy, afterwards king Henry II, it being taken from Roger de Berkeley on account of his adherence to king Stephen. This barony has since that time remained in the male line of this family to the present day. Maurice Berkeley before-mentioned, was the first who had summons to Parliament as lord Berkeley, of Berkeley, in 1295, and his successors took their seat among the barons, until they were raised to the dignity of earls. William Berkeley, the sixth lord Berkeley, was advanced by Edward IV to the honour of viscount Berkeley in 1481, to that of earl of Nottingham in 1483, and to that of marquis of Berkeley in 1489. He dying without male issue these titles became extinct, except that of earl of Nottingham, which was enjoyed by the Mowbrays, his maternal ancestors. George Berkeley, the thirteenth lord Berkeley, was in reward for his loyalty advanced to the dignity of both a viscount and an earl, by the titles of viscount Dursley, and earl of Berkeley. The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Gules, a chevron between ten crosses-pattée, six above and four below argent.

Crest. On a wreath a mitre gules, garnished or, charged with the paternal coat.

Supporters. Two lions argent, the sinister having a ducal crown, and plain collar and chain or.

Motto. "Dieu avec nous."

BERKELEY, Marquis of, a title conferred on William, sixth lord Berkeley, which became extinct at his death, as before-mentioned.

BERKELEY, Lord Berkeley, of Stratton, a title conferred on sir John Berkeley before-mentioned, under History, which became extinct at the death of John, fifth lord Berkeley, without issue, in 1773.

BERKELEY, George (Biog.) second son of bishop Berkeley, was born in 1733, old style, educated at Oxford, and after various preferments in the church died prebendary of Canterbury in 1795. He published two or three single sermons, one of which was preached on the anniversary of king Charles's martyrdom, in 1785, entitled, 'The Danger of violent Innovations in the State, how specious soever the Pretence, exemplified from the Reigns of the two first Stuarts;' which went through six editions.

BERKELEY, Eliza, wife of the preceding, who died in 1800, published, in 1799, the 'Poems' of her son, George Monck Berkeley, and contributed much herself to the 'Gentleman's Magazine.'

BERKELEY, George Monck, son of the preceding, wrote, besides the poems before-mentioned, an amusing volume of anecdotes, entitled, 'Relics,' 1789.

BERKHEYDEN, Job and Gerard (Biog.) two Dutch painters of Haarlem, the eldest of whom excelled in landscapes, and the younger in representing towns. The former was drowned in one of the canals in Holland, at the age of 70, in 1698, and the latter died in 1693.

BERKENHOUT, John (Biog.) a physician of Leeds, was born about 1730, and died in 1791. His principal works are, 1. 'Pharmacopœia Medici,' 12mo. 1766; the third edition in 1782. 2. 'Outlines of the Natural History of Great Britain,' in 3 vols. 1770—1771; reprinted in 1773, and again in 1778, in 2 vols. 8vo. 3. 'Biographia Literaria,' &c. 4to. 1777. 4. 'Lincubations on Ways and Means,' &c. 1780. 5. 'On the Bite of a Mad Dog.' 6. 'Symptomatology.' 7. 'First Lines of the Theory and Practice of Philosophical Chemistry,' 1788; besides a Botanical Lexicon, entitled, 'Clavis Anglica Linguae Botanica,' which appeared in 1765.

BERKSHIRE, Thomas Howard, first Earl of (Hist.) second son of the first earl of Suffolk, who was made master of the horse to Charles, prince of Wales, was afterwards steady in his adherence to his royal master to the close of his life, and died in 1669, after having reaped the rewards of his loyalty.

BERKSHIRE, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed at present by the earl of Suffolk, which was originally conferred on Thomas Howard above-mentioned.

BERKSHIRE (Geog.) called, in the time of Alfred, Berockshire, a county of England, bounded on the N. by Oxford and Buckingham, E. by Surrey, S. by Hampshire, and W. by Wiltshire. History of Beziers.

Beziers, which was distinguished by the Romans by the names of Betarra, [vide Beterra] Betarra, Betira, Civitas Belterrensium, was taken by the Goths in the fifth century, who, according to their custom, destroyed there the finest monuments of Roman grandeur. It was afterwards rebuilt, but suffered much from the Saracens in the eighth century, and still more from Charles Martel, who having taken it from these barbarians, entirely destroyed it, that it might not fall into their hands again. It however regained its importance in the reign of Pepin and his successors, and had at length its own princes, by the title of viscounts. Amauri, the last viscount of Beziers, yielded his rights to Louis VIII. in 1222, since which time it has been united to the crown of France. It suffered much during the civil wars about religion, and its citadel was destroyed in 1633.

Ecclesiastical History.

Before the revolution Beziers was a bishop's see, and it had been the place of assembly for some councils or synods. The Arians are said to have held a synod there in 356, at which they were opposed by S. Hilarius. A council was held on the subject of the Albigenses in 1246, at which John de Burnin, archbishop of Vienne, presided; and William de Broca assembled his suffragans there in 1255, for the promulgation of the laws made by S. Louis; and in 1351 there was another synod, for the purpose of making some canons.

History of Bois le Duc.

This town derives its name from its being built in a woody country, where the dukes of Brabant used to take the diversions of the chase. Duke Godfrey caused the woods to be cut down in 1184, and laid the foundation of a town, which was finished by his son Henry in 1196, and considerably enlarged in 1453. It suffered much during the religious wars of the 16th century; but the Dutch, after many fruitless attempts, at length became masters of it in 1629, and have continued so, with little interruption, ever since. In 1794 it was surrendered to the French under general Pichegru without much opposition, and in 1814 to the Prussians under general Bulow after a few weeks' siege.

Ecclesiastical History of Bois le Duc.

The cathedral, church, which is dedicated to St. John, was built in 1366, by John d'Arkel, bishop of Liege, and is one of the finest structures in the Netherlands. The bishopric was founded in 1559 by pope Paul IV, and Sonnius was its first bishop, but after it fell into the hands of the Dutch, the bishop had his residence at Geldorp.

History of Bologna.

Bologna, which is now the second city, in point of magnitude and opulence, in the Ecclesiastical States, was a Roman colony by the name of Bononia, until the eighth century, when it came into the hands of the Lombards, from whom it was taken by Charlemagne. It afterwards became an independent republic, and acquired such power that it could make a head against the states of Venice, Milan, and Ferrara, and even maintained a war against the emperor Frederick II; but, being torn by intestine factions headed by the Beativoglios, Cannetules, Pepolis, &c. who successively domineered over it, it was finally reduced by Pope Julius II, and has since that time formed a part of the papal dominions.

Ecclesiastical History of Bologna.

St. Apollinaris is supposed to have introduced the Gospel into Bologna, and S. Zama to have been its first bishop in 270, and Gabriel Paleotus to have been the first archbishop, after that Gregory XIII, who was himself a Bolognese, had erected its cathedral into a metropolitan church in 1583. Its suffragans are Parma, Placentia, Reggio, Modena, Cremona, and Borgo San Donnino. Bologna can boast of having given five sovereign pontiffs to the church, namely, Gregory XIII, Honorius II, Lucius II, Innocent IX, and Gregory IX; and it reckons among its bishops several saints, cardinals, and other distinguished men. In the church of St. Petronius, the emperor Charles V. was crowned by Clement VII in 1529, which was the last occasion of performing this ceremony by the hands of the popes on the German emperors. Some ordinances were published at Bologna in 1535, 1586, and 1634; and the council of Trent was transferred to this city in 1547 in consequence of the plague. Leand. Albert. Descript. Ital.

- BOSNIA (Geog.) a country in the south of Europe, which is separated from Sclavonia on the N. by the Save, from Servia on the E. by the Drina, from Dalmatia on the S. by a ridge of mountains, and from Croatia on the W. by the Verbas. It is divided into the three sandjaks of Banjaluka, Orach, and Bosna-Serajo, so called from their chief towns, the last of which is the capital of the country.

History of Bosnia.

Bosnia derives its present name from the river Bosna, which runs through the midst of it; but in the time of the Romans it was known by the name of Pannonia. On the decline of the Roman empire, Bosnia was governed by princes of its own, called Bans, who were dependant, first on the kings of Dalmatia or Servia, and afterwards on those of Hungary, from whom it was wrested by the Turks, who rendered it tributary to them; and on the refusal of Stephen V, its king, to pay the customary tribute, in 1463, Mahomet II reduced the country to a Turkish province, and beheaded the king.

BOSON (Hist.) son of Buves, count of Ardenne, caused himself to be crowned king of Arles, Provence, and Burgundy, in 879; which dignity being confirmed to him by Charles the Fat, he died in the peaceable possession of his newly erected kingdom, in 888, leaving—

BOSON II, his son and successor, who, as is said, died in 944.

BOSON III, nephew of Boson II, succeeded as count of Provence.

BOSON, surnamed Gontran, a general in the service of Childbert, and the other sons of Clotarius I, who, for the active part he took in the intrigues and factions of the times, was put to death by Childbert, king of Austrasia. Gregor. Tur. de Gest. Franc. l. 7.

History of Boulogne.

Boulogne, in the time of the Romans, was distinguished mostly by the names of Bononia and Bolanis; and the port of Boulogne by the names of Portus Iccius, Portus Marinus, Portus Mariudrum, Gessuriacus Portus, Gessariacum Navale. It formerly had counts of its own, who spring by the female line from the second race of French kings, many of whom are distinguished in history; as Baldwin I, also count of Flanders; Godfrey of Bouillon; and Baldwin, afterward king of Jerusalem, &c.; in 1534 it was ceded to Philip the Good, and from that time it was united to the crown of France. In 1544 it was besieged and taken by the English, but restored again at the peace in 1550. In 1690 the fortifications and the citadel were razed to the ground; and, during the revolutionary war, extensive preparations were made here, particularly by Bonaparte, for the invasion of England, who caused a column to be erected that remains still incomplete.

Ecclesiastical History of Boulogne.

Boulogne was erected into a bishop's see by Pius V in 1566, of which Claude André Dormé was the first prelate. The bishopric of Boulogne is at present included in that of Arras. A synod was held here in 1646 by Francis Perrochel. Sammart. Gall. Christ.; Du Chene, Hist. de Guise; Du Cange, &c.

BOULTER, Hughes (Ecc.) archbishop of Armagh, was born in 1671, educated at Oxford, where he was cotemporary with Addison, consecrated bishop of Bristol in 1719, translated to the archbishopric of Armagh in 1724, and died in 1743. He left very little in writing, except a few charges.

BOUQUIN (Biog.) vide Boquine.

BOURBON (Hist.) the name of a family the most illustrious, both for its rank and its antiquity, of any in Europe. Genealogists derive its origin from Ferreolus, a prætorian prefect in the fifth century, from whom descended Hugh Capet, the first of the third race of French kings, and from him descended S. Louis, or Louis IX, whose son Robert, of France, seigneur of Bourbon, was the ancestor of Henry IV, of Navarre, who stood in the tenth descent from Louis, and was the founder of the house of Bourbon, who have since been in possession of the thrones not only of France but of Spain, Naples, and Sicily.

BOURBON, Louis I, de, son of the above-named Robert, was the first duke of Bourbon, which was erected into a duchy in his favour by Charles the Fair in 1327.

BOURBON, Peter I, Duc de, was killed at the battle of Poitiers in 1356.

BOURBON, John I, Duc de, was taken prisoner at the battle of Agincourt, and died in England in 1433.

BOURBON, Louis de, third son of John I, duke of Bourbon, became dauphin of Auvergne, and count of Montpensier, from whom descended the branch of Montpensier.

BOURBON, Charles III, Duc de, and constable of France, was born in 1489; and, after leaving the service of Francis I, his master, he was killed at Rome in 1527 in the service of the emperor Charles V.

BOURBON, Matthew de, surnamed the Great Bastard of Bourbon, distinguished himself in the service of Louis XI, and Charles VII. He was at the defeat of the duke of Cleves in 1487, and was taken prisoner in 1495.

BOURBON, Louis de, second son of John of Bourbon, count de la Marche, commenced the branch of Vendôme, from which descended Henry IV of Navarre. He was count of Vendôme, and his great grandson was duke of Vendôme.

BOURBON, Anthony de, duke of Vendôme, married Jane d'Albret, queen of Navarre, by whom he had Henry IV, king of France and Navarre, and died in 1572.

BOURBON, Condé Louis, Duc de, a French general, gained great reputation at the battles of Steinkerque and Nerwinde, and died suddenly at Paris in 1710, aged 42. His branch of the family sprung from the Bourbons, dukes of Vendôme.

BOURBON, Condé Henry Louis, Duc de, was employed in the regency during the minority of Louis XV, and died at Chantilly in 1740, aged 48.

BOURBON, the name of several branches of the same family; as Bourbon-Conte, sprung from that of Condé; Bourbon-Soissons, sprung also from that of Condé, &c.

BOURBON (Biog.) or Borbonius, Nicholas, a Latin poet of Vandœuvre, near Langres, was born in 1503, and died in 1550, leaving eight books of epigrams, besides a didactic poem on the forge, entitled 'Ferrarie,' 8vo. 1533; and also a poem, 'De Pucorum Moribus,' 4to. Lugd. 1533.

BOURBON, Nicholas, nephew to the preceding, and also a Latin poet, whose poems were printed in 12mo, Paris, 1651.

BOURBON (Geog.) the name of some places in France.

BOURBON, l'Archambaud, a town of the Bourbonnois, in France, in the modern department of Allier, 14 miles W. Moulins, 28 S. Nevers. Lon. 3° 3' E., lat. 46° 35' N. It is worthy of notice, as the place which has given its name to the illustrious family of Bourbon above-mentioned.

BOURBON-LANCY (Geog.) a town of Burgundy, in France, called in the Latin of the middle ages Borbonium Anselmum, is remarkable only for its mineral waters and the Roman antiquities, which are in the neighbourhood. It stands near the Loire, 36 miles S. W. Autun.

BOURBONNOIS (Geog.) a province and government with the title first of a county, and afterwards of a duchy. [Vide Bourbon.]

BOURCHIER, Sir John, Lord Berners (Hist.) distinguished himself against the rebels in the reign of Henry VII; and, being made chancellor of the Exchequer for life, he attended the lady Mary, the king's sister, who was going into France to be married to Louis XI, and died governor of Calais in 1532. His principal work, as an author, was the translation of 'Froissart's Chronicles,' 2 vols. fol. 1523, 1525.

BOURCHIER (Ecc.) Bowschyre, or Bowser, Thomas, archbishop of Canterbury, in the successive reigns of Henry VI, Edward IV, Richard III, and Henry VII, was son of William Bouchier, earl of Ewe, in Normandy, and brother to Henry Bouchier, earl of Essex. He was chancellor of Oxford from 1433 to 1437, promoted to the see of Worcester by pope Eugenius IV in 1433, translated to that of Ely in 1443, elected archbishop of Canterbury in 1454, and died in 1486, after having presided over the church 32 years, during the most troublesome times. By his means printing was introduced into Oxford 10 years sooner than at any other place in Europe, except Haerlem and Mentz.

BOURCHIER (Her.) the family name for the marquis of Bath, lord Berners, earl of Essex, and lord Fitz-Warren, all which titles are now extinct. [Vide Bath, &c.]

BOURDALONE, Louis (Biog.) a Jesuit of Bourges, was born in 1632, and died in 1704, leaving many works of piety, particularly sermons, which, for their eloquence, have gone through many editions, the best of which are that in 16 vols. 8vo. 1716, and the second in 18 vols. 12mo.

BOURDEAUX (Geog.) a large and opulent town of France, and formerly the capital of Guisane, is situated on the Garonne, 55 miles S. Saintes, 90 S. La Rochelle, 28 W. S. W. Lyons, and 325 S. W. Paris. Lon. 0° 28' W. lat. 44° 50' N.

History of Bordeaux.

Bordeaux, which was known to the Romans by the name of Burdigala [vide Burdigala], was occupied by the Goths in the fifth century, by whom it was burnt after it had fallen into the hands of the French. The Saracens took it in 732, and it afterwards suffered much from the inroads of the Normans and Vandals. It was then governed by princes of its own; namely, the dukes of Guienne; and on the marriage of Eleanor, daughter of William X, last duke of Guienne, to Louis VII of France, it was united, with its provinces, to the French crown; but she being afterwards divorced from this king, and marrying Henry, duke of Normandy and king of England, Bordeaux came into the possession of the English, by whom it was greatly improved. To this city Edward the Black Prince conducted his captive John, king of France, after the battle of Poitiers, and made it the seat of his court for 11 years. It was not re-annexed to the crown of France till the time of Charles VII, about 1451; and a century after it was the scene of an insurrection on the subject of the salt-tax, when, among other excesses, the governor de Moreno was murdered, for which the town was severely punished by the constable Montmorency. During the civil wars about religion, the marshal de Matignon kept the place true to the king, although it contained many partisans for the league. During the late revolution, it was the theatre of atrocities similar to what were committed in all parts of France; but, on the downfall of Bonaparte, it was the first to acknowledge its lawful sovereigns, the Bourbons.

Ecclesiastical History of Bordeaux.

S. Martial is supposed to have been the apostle of Bordeaux; but the first prelate who presided here, of whom mention is made, is S. Gilbert. It is an archbishop's see, and had formerly nine suffragans, but at present only three. Several councils have been held in this city; namely, in 384, 1093, 1098, 1263, 1582, and 1624, besides several synods. Aimon. l. 1; Thuan. Hist. l. 1; De Marca, Hist. de Bearn; *Sammart. Gall. History of Bourges.

Bourges, which is one of the most ancient towns of Gaul, was called by the Romans Avaricum, from the river Avara, and also Biturix, or Biturice, from its inhabitants, the Bituriges. It suffered much in the fifth century from the inroads of the Visigoths, and after being reduced by Clovis, it fell to the share of Clodovir, and then to that of Gontran, king of Orleans, from whom it was taken by Dideric, a general of Chilperic I, and entirely burnt in 583; it was rebuilt in the reign of Charlemagne, and had princes of its own by the name of counts, until the reign of Charles VII, who taking up his abode there, was, in derision, called King of Bourges, and here it was that Louis XI was born. In 1562 it was taken by the prince of Condé, for the Huguenots; in the same year it was besieged and retaken by the duke of Guise, for Charles IX.

Ecclesiastical History.

The church of Bourges was episcopal and metropolitan, the archbishop of which was also styled the patriarch, and primate of Aquitania. This prelate had under him 11 suffragans, but these were afterwards reduced in number. Among its bishops, it reckoned not less than 18 who were canonized, as Ursinus, Palladius, Simplicius, Honore, &c. Many councils or synods were held here during the 11th, 12th, and following centuries. *Greg. Tur. l. 1; Grat. Decret. l. 4; Pap. Mass. Descript. Flum.; Sammart's Gall. Christ.; Du Chêne, Rech. Arms. Azure, a fesse chequy or and gules, in chief three mullets of the second, in base a crescent or.

Crest. Three ostrich feathers sable.

Motto. "Confido."

BOYD, Mark Alexander (Biog.) a Latin poet of Galloway, and nephew to the archbishop of Glasgow, died in 1601, at the age of 38, after leading an adventurous life, divided betwixt the pursuits of arms and that of law. Besides his Epistles after the Manner of Ovid, he wrote many Latin poems and law pieces, not printed. The only works now known are his 'Epistolæ Heroidum,' and his 'Hymni,' inserted in the 'Delicia Scotorum,' 2 vols. 12mo. Amst. 1637.

BOYD, Robert, a Scotch divine, of the noble family of the Boyds before-mentioned, was born in 1578, and died in 1627. Being averse to the union of the Scotch and English churches, which was agitated at that time, he resigned his clerical functions some time before his death. He left a Latin Commentary on the Epistle to the Ephesians, entitled 'Roberti Bodii Scoti Prælectiones in Epistolam ad Ephesios,' fol. London, 1652.

BOYDELL, John (Biog.) an engraver of Dorrington, in Shropshire, died in 1804, aged 85. He established the Shakespear Gallery, in Pall-mall, but disposed of his property in it by a public lottery.

BOYER, Abel (Biog.) a lexicographer and miscellaneous writer of Castres, was born in 1667, and died in 1729, a French refugee in Chelsea. He wrote a French Dictionary and Grammar, which are well known, besides works of a political character, which made Swift his enemy, and procured him a place in the Dunciad of Pope; among these are 'The Post Boy,' 'The Political State of Great Britain,' 'Annals of the Reign of Queen Anne,' &c.

BOYER, Claude, a native of Alby, who left the pulpit for the stage, and died in 1698, at the age of 80; was the author of 22 dramatic pieces of little merit.

BOYLE, John (Hist.) of the first family mentioned under Heraldry, was killed at the battle of Barnockburn, with his royal master, James III, in 1488.

BOYLE, John, his descendant, supported queen Mary, and died in 1610.

BOYLE, John, son of the preceding, supported the royal cause during the rebellion, for which he suffered a ten years' banishment, almost to the ruin of his estate.

BOYLE, David, vide Glasgow.

BOYLE, Richard, Earl of Cork, &c. a statesman, of the second family mentioned under Heraldry, was born at Canterbury in 1566, and died in 1643, after having raised himself to a state of opulence and distinction by his activity and talents in a civil and military capacity in Ireland, during the reigns of Elizabeth, James, and Charles I. He also lived long enough to testify his loyalty in the time of the rebellion in Ireland, by raising troops at his own expense, at the head of which his four sons were engaged in the battle of Liscarrol, in 1622. He wrote his own life, which was entitled, 'True Remembrances,' 1632, which remains in MS. in the possession of the family.

BOYLE, Richard, the second son of the preceding, and second earl of Cork, was born in 1612, and after serving the king during the Irish rebellion, he carried his forces over into England, to the service of the king there, and when the royal cause was grown desperate, he withdrew to the continent, and suffered the rebels to deal with his estates as they thought fit. At the Restoration he experienced the favour of his sovereign, and died full of honours in 1697.

BOYLE, Richard, the fourth earl of Cork, and great grandson of Richard, the second earl, was born in 1695, and died in 1753, after having retired for some time from public life, and employed himself in architecture, and the decoration of his gardens. He was the patron of genius, and the friend of Pope.

BOYLE, Richard, third son of the preceding, went as a volunteer against the Dutch, and lost his life with the earl of Falmouth, and the lord Muskerry, who fell all three by one cannon shot, in the great engagement June 3, in 1665, in Solebay.

BOYLE, Lewis, Lord Viscount Boyle, of Kinalmeachy, the fourth son of Richard, the first earl of Cork, was killed at the battle of Lisacrol, in 1622, fighting against the rebels.

BOYLE, Roger, Earl of Orrery, the fifth son of Richard, earl of Cork, and lord Broghill, by which latter title he is best known in history, distinguished himself at first in the royal cause; but afterwards condescended to fight for, and receive favours from, the usurper, notwithstanding which he interested himself in favour of the restoration, and died in 1679. His writings are, 1. 'The Irish Colours Displayed,' &c. 4to. London, 1662. 2. 'An Answer to a Scandalous Letter,' &c. 4to. Dublin, 1662. 3. 'A Poem on his Majesty's Happy Restoration.' 4. 'A Poem on the Death of the celebrated Mr. Abram Cowley,' fol. London, 1667. 5. 'The History of Henry V,' a tragedy, fol. London, 1668; besides other tragedies. 6. 'State Letters,' fol. 1742.

BOYLE, Francis, Lord Viscount Shannon, the sixth son of the earl of Cork, distinguished himself against the rebels in Ireland, and afterwards was very active in promoting the restoration, being employed to carry letters of invitation to king Charles II.

BOYLE, Robert, the seventh and youngest son, and fourteenth child of the first earl of Cork, though not a public man, yet a distinguished writer and philosopher, was born at Lismore in 1620, and died in 1691, after having devoted his life to the pursuits of science. He wrote, among other things, 1. 'New Experiments Physico-Mechanical,' &c. 8vo. Oxford, 1660; 4to. 1662 and 1682. 2. 'Seraphic Love,' &c. 8vo. 1660; reprinted several times since, and translated into Latin. 3. 'Certain Physiological Essays, and other Tracts,' 4to. 1661, 1669; and translated into Latin. 4. 'Sceptical Chemist,' 8vo. 1662 and 1679. 5. 'Considerations, touching the Usefulness of Experimental Natural Philosophy,' 4to. 1663 and 1664. 6. 'Experiments, &c. upon Colours,' 8vo. 1663 and 1670; also translated into Latin. 7. 'Considerations upon the Style of the Holy Scriptures,' 8vo. Oxford, 1663; also translated into Latin, and published in 1664. 8. 'Occasional Reflections,' &c. 8vo. 1665 and 1669; which caused Dean Swift to write a piece, entitled, 'A Pious Meditation upon a Broomstick, in the Style of the Honourable Mr. Boyle.' 9. 'Experimenta et Observationes Physicæ,' &c. 8vo. 1691; besides numerous tracts and essays on subjects of natural philosophy, either printed separately or inserted in the Philosophical Transactions; and some posthumous works of the same nature, which were altogether collected and printed in 5 vols. fol., and 6 vols. 4to.; and afterwards by Dr. Shaw, in 3 vols. 4to. 'Abridged, Methodized, and Disposed,' &c. Mr. Boyle, among other acts which testified his zeal in behalf of religion, was the founder of annual lectures, known by the name of Boyle's Lectures, in defence of the gospel against infidels of all sorts; which have produced many elaborate defences of religion both natural and revealed. A collection of the sermons delivered at these lectures, from 1691 to 1732, was printed in 3 vols. fol. 1739, under the title of 'A Defence of Natural and Revealed Religion;' and an abridgment of these lectures, in 4 vols. 8vo., was published by the Rev. Gilbert Burnet. A list of all the preachers, since the foundation to the present time, may be seen in Nicholl's Life of Bowyer.

BOYLE, Richard, second Viscount Shannon, the grandson of Francis Boyle, and the great grandson of the earl of Cork, distinguished himself before he was twenty years of age at the battle of the Boyne, in 1690, and afterwards in the campaigns in the Netherlands, and died in 1740, one of the lords justices in Ireland, and commander-in-chief of all his majesty's forces there.

BOYLE, Charles, second son of Roger, earl of Orrery, and fourth earl of Orrery at the death of his brother, was born in 1676, and after being educated at Oxford made several campaigns under the duke of Marlborough, in which he signalized himself, particularly at the battle of Malplaquet. He was declared envoy extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the States of Brabant and Flanders, in 1710; committed to the Tower in 1722, on suspicion of high treason, on account of Layer's plot; but discharged for want of evidence six months after. He died in 1737, leaving an edition of the Epistles of Phalaris; the genuineness of which being disputed by Bentley, gave rise to several pamphlets on both sides, that served to amuse the wits of the day. He also wrote 'As You Find It,' a comedy, printed in the second volume of the works of Roger, earl of Orrery; besides a copy of verses to Dr. Garth, upon his dispensary, &c. The instrument called the Orrery derives its name from him, as the first encourager of the invention.

BOYLE, John, son of the preceding, and earl of Cork and Orrery, was born in 1706, educated at Westminster and Christ Church, Oxford, and died in 1762, after having passed a life devoted to literary ease, the fruits of which were, 1. 'The Letters of Pliny the Younger, with Observations,' &c. 2 vols. 4to. London, 1750. 2. 'Remarks on the Life and Writings of Dr. Swift, Dean of St. Patrick's, Dublin.' 3. 'Memoirs of the Life of Robert Cary, Earl of Monmouth,' 1759, 1760. 4. 'The Discourse upon the Theatre of the Greeks.' 5. 'The Original of Tragedy.' 6. 'The Parallel of the Theatres.' 7. 'Letters from Italy,' a posthumous work, written in 1754 and 1755, and published in 1774; besides some occasional poems and papers in the 'World,' the 'Connoisseur,' and the 'Gentleman's Magazine.'

BOYLE, Henry, Lord Carillon, of the same family, was lord president of the council, and secretary of state in the reign of George I, and died in 1724, after having held several posts under government, until the change in the ministry in 1710.

BOYLE, Michael (Ecc.) of the same family, died bishop of Waterford in 1635.

BOYLE, Richard, brother of the preceding, and bishop of Cork and Ross, died archbishop of Tuam in 1644.

BOYLE, Michael, son of archbishop Boyle, died archbishop of Armagh and lord chancellor of Ireland in 1708, aged 93.
BOYLE, John, died bishop of Cork, Cloyne, and Ross, in 1620.

BOYLE (Her.) the name of an ancient family of Kelburn, co. Ayr, of which honourable mention is made under History. The first who enjoyed the dignity of the peerage was David Boyle, who was created in 1699 a peer, by the title of lord Boyle, of Kelburn, Stewarton, Cumbra, Larys, and Dalry, and in 1703 was further dignified with the titles of earl of Glasgow, viscount of Kelburn, and lord Boyle of Stewarton, &c. [Vide Glasgow]

BOYLE, the name of another ancient family, of whom mention is made as early as Henry III, when they had their residence in Herefordshire; it has been more distinguished in the later periods of history, [vide Boyle, under History] and also in the annals of heraldry, by the numerous honours which it has enjoyed. Richard Boyle before-mentioned, the first earl of Cork, and founder of these honours, was created baron of Youghall, co. Cork, in 1616, viscount of Dungarvon, co. Waterford, and earl of Cork, in 1620. His son Richard was in 1644 created a baron of this realm, by the title of lord Clifford, of Lanesborough, co. York, and in 1663 was raised to the dignity of earl of Burlington, alias Bridlington, co. Devonshire, which titles became extinct at the death of the third earl of Burlington. Lewis, the fourth son of the first earl of Cork, was created in 1628 baron of Bandon-Bridge, and lord viscount Boyle, of Kinalmeachy, which titles became extinct at his death. Roger, the fifth son of the same, was created lord Boyle, baron of Broghill, in 1628, and earl of Orrery in 1660. Francis, sixth son of the same, and brother of Roger, was created in 1660 lord viscount Shannon, co. Limerick, which title became extinct at his death; but Henry Boyle, the son of Henry, second son of the said Roger, first earl of Orrery, was created in 1756 baron of Castlemartyr, and earl of Shannon, &c. [Vide Shannon] Charles Boyle, the fourth earl of Orrery, the literary antagonist of Bentley, was created a peer of Great Britain by queen Anne, in 1676, by the title of lord Boyle, baron of Marston, co. Somerset. The titles at present enjoyed by the lineal descendants of Roger, earl of Orrery, together with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Boyle, lord Boyle, baron Marston, in England; and earl of Cork, and of Orrery, viscount Dungarvon, lord Boyle, of Youghall, and lord Boyle, of Broghill, in Ireland.

Motto. "Honor virtutis premium."

BOYNE, Viscount (Her.) one of the dignities and titles enjoyed at present by a branch of the family of Hamilton. Gustavus Hamilton, grandson of lord Claude Hamilton, earl of Arran, &c. was created a baron in 1715, and viscount Boyne in 1717, from the battle of Boyne, at which he distinguished himself. The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Hamilton, viscount Boyne, and baron Hamilton, co. Meath.

Arms. Gules, three cinque foils pierced ermine.

Crest. The same as the lord viscount Strabane's.

Supporters. Two mermaids proper, with golden hair dishevelled, each holding a mirror or.

Motto. "Nec timeo, nec sperno."

BOYNTON (Her.) the name of a family in Yorkshire, of whom mention is made as early as the tenth century. Sir Matthew Boynton, a descendant, was created a baronet in 1618; which dignity is at present enjoyed by the family, whose arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Or, a fess between three crescents gules. The fess was formerly charged with a lion passant or.

Crest. On a wreath a goat passant sable, guttée d'argent, beard, horns, and hoofs or.

Motto. "Il temps passa."

'An Historical Review of the Transactions of Europe,' &c. 2 vols. 8vo. 1747; besides translations, and some detached poems, &c.

BOZE, Claude Gros de (Biog.) an antiquary of Lyons, was born in 1680, and died in 1753. Among his works are, 1. The edition of the first 15 volumes of the 'Memoires de l'Academie des Inscriptions et Belles Lettres.' 2. The second edition of 'Histoire Medallique de Louis XIV,' brought down to his death, fol. 1723; besides many dissertations on medallic subjects, and a catalogue of his library, fol. 1745.

BRABANT (Geog.) a province of the Netherlands, with the title of a duchy, bounded on the N. by Holland and Guelderland, on the W. by Zealand and Flanders, on the S. by Hainault and Namur, and on the E. by Liege and Guelderland. The principal towns of Brabant are Brussels, Antwerp, Bois le Duc, Breda, and Bergen-op-Zoom.

History of Brabant.

Anchises, the father of Pepin Heristel, is supposed to have been lord of Brabant, whose princes at first took the title of counts, and about the 15th century that of dukes. They exercised considerable authority over the sovereigns of the other provinces; and in later periods the deputies of Brabant held the first place in the general assembly of the states. It belonged partly to the house of Austria, and partly to the United Provinces, whence it was divided into Austrian or Spanish Brabant, and Dutch or Staats Brabant. In 1746 the French seized on the Austrian part; but restored it at the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle. In 1794 it was again conquered by the French, to whom it was confirmed by the treaties of Campo Formio, in 1794, and Luneville, in 1801.

BRABAZON (Her.) the family name of the earl of Meath; sir Edward Brabazon having been advanced in 1616 to the dignity of a baron, by the title of baron Brabazon, of Ardee, and his son William was created in 1627 earl of Meath. [Vide Meath]

It is divided into the Electoral and New Mark, and its principal towns are Berlin, Brandenburg, Potsdam, Francfort on the Oder, Custrin, &c.

History of Brandenburg.

The original inhabitants of Brandenburg were the Teutones, who were succeeded by the Suevi, the Senones, the Vandals, and the Saxons, who were reduced by Charlemagne. The Henetii afterwards got possession of the country, which being conquered by the emperor Henry I, in 927, was erected into a marquisate, in favour of Siegfried, brother of the empress. In the 12th century the emperor Conrad III gave it to Albert I, of the house of Anhalt, whose successors were made electors. On the extinction of this family it passed through several hands, until it came into the possession of Frederic, burgrave of Nuremberg, in 1415, from whom is descended the present reigning family of Prussia. He was succeeded by his two sons Frederic II and Albert, the latter of whom divided his territory among his three sons; but they were soon incorporated again. Brandenburg suffered much during the thirty years' wars; but revived under the administration of Frederick William, who made great accession to his territories. His son, Frederic I, was in 1701 crowned king of Prussia; since which time the history of Brandenburg is united with that of Prussia.

BRAUWER (Biog.) vide Brouwer.

BRAY, Sir Reginald (Hist.) the descendant of a family of that name, which came over with the conqueror, was instrumental in raising Henry VII to the throne, and negotiated the marriage of this prince with Elizabeth, the daughter of Edward IV. He died in 1501, after having received great accessions, both to his estate and his honour.

BRAY, Lord (Her.) the title enjoyed by Edmund, the nephew of sir Reginald Bray before-mentioned, who was summoned to Parliament in 1530, as baron of Eaton Bray; but the title became extinct at the death of his son John, without male issue, in 1557.

BRAY, Thomas (Biog.) an English divine, and native of Shropshire, was born in 1556, and died in 1730, after having done considerable service in settling the churches of Maryland and Virginia, on which he bestowed the bulk of his own property. He left among his printed works, 1. 'Catechetical Lectures.' 2. 'Bibliotheca Parochialis,' &c. 1696. 3. 'Directorium Missionarium.'

BRAYBROOKE, Lord (Her.) a title enjoyed by a family which is descended in the male line from the Aldworths, of Stanlake, co. Berks, and in the female line from the Ne-villes, of Bellingbear, co. Berks. Richard Alworth Neville succeeded to the barony of Braybrooke, as second lord Braybrooke, on the death of John, lord Howard de Walden, who was created baron of Braybrooke in 1788. Pursuant to his will, lord Braybrooke assumed the name of Griffin. The title, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Title. Griffin, lord Braybrooke, baron of Braybrooke, co. Northampton.

Arms. First and fourth sable, a griffin segreant argent, beaked and langued or; second and third gules, a saltire argent, charged with a rose of the field, and a crescent for a difference.

BREA, Lodovigo (Biog.) an artist of Nizza, who flourished from 1483 to 1513, may be considered as the founder of the primitive Ligurian school. His Murder of the Innocents, preserved at St. Agustin's, and a St. John in the oratory of the Madona di Savona, are among his most admired pieces.

BREADALBANE, John, Earl of (Hist.) son of sir John Campbell, of Glenorchy, gave many instances of his loyalty and attachment to king Charles II, and was very active in promoting the Restoration. He afterwards adhered to James II, as long as any hopes remained of his return. He was, however, a great enemy to the Union in 1791, and was suspected of favouring the insurrection of the earl of Mar, in 1715; but his death, which happened about this time, prevented any ill consequence to himself from that affair.

BREADALBANE, John, second Earl of, who was one of the sixteen peers for Scotland to two British Parliaments, was lord lieutenant of the county of Perth, and distinguished himself by his steady adherence to the establishment in church and state.

BREADALBANE, John, third Earl of, was in 1720 appointed envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the court of Denmark; and after sitting in Parliament as one of the sixteen peers of Scotland, he died in 1782.

BREADALBANE, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed at present by the family of Campbell. [Vide Campbell] Sir John Campbell, of Glenorchy, before-mentioned under History, was for his loyalty created earl of Breadalbane and Holland, and viscount Glenorchy, &c. in 1681; and John Campbell, a collateral relation of the preceding, and fourth earl of Breadalbane, was created a baron of Breadalbane of Taymouth Castle, in the peerage of the United Kingdom, in 1806. The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

BRECKNOCK, Earl (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the marquis of Queensberry.

BREDA, Peter Van (Biog.) a landscape painter of Antwerp was born in 1630, and died in 1681. He adorned landscapes with figures, correctly drawn and judiciously grouped. BREDA, John Van, a landscape and historical painter of Antwerp, who was born in 1683, and died in 1750, acquired a fortune and reputation in London by the labours of his pencil, which could hardly supply the demand for his performances. When Louis XIV. visited Antwerp, he did Breda the honour of purchasing four of his pictures, namely, Christ at the Sea of Tiberias, Christ performing Miracles, and two landscapes.

BREDA (Geog.) a large and strong town of Dutch Brabant, near the influx of the Aa into the Merck, 22 m. S. S. E. Rotterdam, and 48 S. Amsterdam, lon. 4° 46' E., lat. 51° 35' N.

History of Breda.

The lordship of this town belonged in 1212 to Geoffry Seigneur of the Bergues, and passed into the house of Nassau, in 1404. It suffered much in the wars between the Dutch and Spaniards. It was taken by the duke of Alva in 1581, and in 1599 Maurice of Nassau made himself master of it by stratagem; but it was retaken after a siege of six months by the Spaniards in 1625, who retained it till 1637, when it was finally retaken by the Dutch. In 1667 a congress was held at Breda, for making a peace, which was concluded between England, France, Denmark, and the States-General; and another congress was to have been held in 1747, which was removed to Aix-la-Chapelle. In February, 1793, the French made themselves masters of this town; but gave it up again, until, with the conquest of Holland, it came again into their possession. On the restoration of the prince of Orange, in 1813, the French left the town to attack a Russian corps, when the royal burghesses shut the gates and prevented them from entering the town again.

BRENNBERG, Bartolemeo (Biog.) a painter and engraver of Utrecht, was born in 1620, and died in 1660. There remain of his works 24 etchings of views, &c. from his own designs.

BREITINGER, John James (Biog.) a writer of Zurich, was born in 1701, and died in 1776. He wrote, 1. 'Bibliothèque Helvétique,' in conjunction with Bodmer. 2. A New Edition of the Septuagint, 4 vols. 4to. Tigur. 1730. 3. 'Diatribe Historico-Literaria,' 8vo. 1740.

BREITKOPF, John Gottlieb Immanuel (Biog.) a literary printer and bookseller of Leipzig, was born in 1719, and died in 1794. He published, among other things, 1. 'An Attempt to illustrate the Origin of Card-playing,' &c. 2. 'A Treatise on Bibliography,' &c.

BRENNUS (Hist.) a general of the Galli Senones, who, entering Italy, defeated the Romans at the battle of Allia, and took possession of the city, while the Romans took refuge in the capitol until they were relieved by Camillus, who, returning from his banishment, completely routed the Gauls. Those who escaped from the slaughter are said to have fled with their general into Greece, where he was killed by Phollos for his sacrilegious attempt on the temple of Delphi. Polyb. l. 4; Liv. l. 5; Diodor. l. 14; Callim. Hymn. 3; Justin. l. 43; Elor.

BRENT, Sir Nathaniel (Biog.) a native of Woodstock, and a lawyer, was educated at Merton College, Oxford, of which he was warden, and died in 1652, at the age of 79, after having sided with the rebels, and thereby held his offices in the University. Among his works, as an author, are, 1. 'A Translation of the History of the Council of Trent, from the Italian,' which was published at London in 1619, and the English translation in the same year in fol. also in 1640 and 1676. 2. A New Edition of Mr. Francis Mason's Vindication of the Church of England, concerning the Consecration and Ordination of the Bishops, &c. in Latin, fol. 1625.

BRENTFORD, Earl of (Her.) a title conferred by Charles I in 1644 on Patrick Ruthven, earl of Forth, in Scotland, for his distinguished services at the battles of Edge-hill, Brentford, and Newbury. The title became extinct at his death in 1651.

BRENTIUS (Biog.) or Brentzen, John, one of the early reformers, was born in 1499, and died in 1570. His works were printed together in 8 vols. fol. Tubingen, 1576—90, after having been printed separately during his life.

BRENTON (Her.) the name of a family which at present enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet. Sir Jahleel Brenton, the son of Jahleel Brenton, rear-admiral of the Blue, commanded the Spartan frigate of 38 guns, and 250 men, in the memorable action in the bay of Naples in 1810, when, with his single ship, he completely defeated a Neapolitan squadron of 96 guns, and upwards of 1100 men; for which gallant action he was created a baronet in 1812. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Gules, a lion rampant, double queue between two martlets argent, on a canton the stern of a ship of the line proper.

Crest. Within a naval crown, the circle inscribed with the word 'Spartan,' a swan gutté de sang.

BRESCIA (Geog.) a town of Italy, 80 miles S. E. Bergamo, 54 N. Parma, 106 W. Venice. Lon. 10° 14' E. lat. 46° N.

History of Brescia.

Brescia, distinguished by the Romans under the name of Brizia, was burned by the Goths in 412, and entirely ruined by Attila some time after. On being rebuilt, it successively came into the hands of the Lombards, Charlemagne, and the kings of Italy. It was afterwards taken by the emperor Henry VI, and occupied by the dukes of Milan, by whom it was given to the republic of Venice. In 1796 it was taken by the French.

BRESLAU (Geog.) the capital of Silesia, situated on the left bank of the Oder, 130 miles E. Dresden. Lon. 17° 2' E. lat. 51° N.

History of Breslau.

Breslau was called in Latin Uratialavia, Budorgis, and Budorigum, where, in 1109, Boleslaus III, king of Poland, defeated the emperor Henry V. It suffered much from the inroads of the Tartars in the 13th century. It was afterwards exposed to two dreadful conflagrations, from which it recovered through the munificence of the emperor Charles IV, who enlarged it, and invested it with many privileges. It shared in the miseries which afflicted Germany in the 16th and 17th centuries, during the wars about religion; and, since it came into the possession of the king of Prussia in 1741, it has been taken by the Austrians, namely, in 1757, and invested by them again in 1760, but abandoned after a three days' bombardment. It underwent another siege and bombardment in 1806 from the Bavarians and the other confederate states, to whom it surrendered after an obstinate resistance in 1807.

Ecclesiastical History of Breslau.

Breslau was erected into a bishopric in 1033, and formerly suffragan of Gnesne, but afterwards dependant immediately on the pope. Councils were held here in 1246 and 1248.

History of Brest.

Brest, which is mentioned by the ancients under the name of Brivallia Portus, has acquired a celebrity in later times by the commodiousness of its harbour, which is one of the best in Europe. The most remarkable event in its history is the attempt which was made against it in 1694 by a British fleet and army under lord Berkeley and general Talmache, who were repulsed after a desperate conflict, with the loss of 400 seamen, 900 soldiers, and the gallant Talmache. It was also with a fleet equipped at Brest that admiral Villaret engaged with lord Howe on the memorable June 1, 1794, when he was defeated with the loss of six ships of the line. During the rest of that and the following war, the harbour of Brest was incessantly blockaded by an English squadron.

'An Account of the Six Articles usually proposed to the Missionaries that suffered in England.'

BRIDGET (Biog.) vide Brigita.

BRIDIEU, Louis de (Hist.) a governor of Guise, which he defended in difficult times during the minority of Louis XIV, against two considerable armies, namely, against a Spanish and a French army, which was leagued against that prince, and besieged the city. He compelled them, by his valour and conduct, to raise the siege, and thus prevented their march to Paris.

BRIDPORT, Viscount (Hist.) Sir Alexander Hood, the younger brother of viscount Hood, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was early engaged in the naval service, in which he distinguished himself in every rank that he passed through, and on every occasion where valour and conduct were required, particularly in the memorable action of June 1, 1794, where he fought under Lord Howe, and that of June 1795, in which, as commander-in-chief of a squadron lying off Spithead, he engaged the French and took three of their vessels. He died in 1814, full of honours.

BRIDPORT, Viscount (Her.) one of the titles conferred in 1801, on sir Alexander Hood, K. B. before-mentioned, who had been previously raised to the peerage of Ireland in 1794, by the title of baron Bridport, of Cricket St. Thomas, and in 1796 was created baron Bridport, of Bridport, co. Dorsetshire. At his death the Irish titles became extinct, but he was succeeded in the English barony by his grand-nephew Samuel Hood. The title, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Title. Hood, baron Bridport, of Cricket St. Thomas.

Arms, &c. The same as those of viscount Hood. [Vide Hood]

BRIEN (Hist.) vide O'Brien.

BRIENNE (Hist.) the name of an illustrious family in France, which derived its origin from Engilbert, who was count of Brienne in 990, in the reign of Hugh Capet.

BRIENNE, Walter III de, king of Sicily, and duke of Apulia, distinguished himself at the siege of Acre, against the Saracens, and was afterwards killed in 1205, in defending his dukedom, which he held in right of his wife.

BRIENNE, Walter IV de, his son and successor, surnamed the Great, signalized himself against the Saracens, by whom being taken prisoner, he was put to death in 1251.

BRIENNE, John de, going on his crusades, was chosen king of Jerusalem, in 1209, which he resigned in 1229. He afterwards filled the throne of Constantinople, and died in 1237.

BRIENNE, Walter VI de, duke of Athens, and constable of France, was killed at the battle of Poitiers, in 1356.

BRIENNE (Biog.) vide Bryennius.

BRIET, Philip (Biog.) a geographer of Abbeville, was born in 1601, and died in 1668, leaving among his works, 1. 'Xenia Delphino oblata Nomine Collegii Rothomagensis,' 4to. Rothom. 1639. 2. BRISSAC, Marshal de (Hist.) vide Cosse.

BRISSONIUS, Barnaby (Hist.) president of the parliament of Paris, and ambassador in England for Henry III, was dragged to prison by the friends of the league during the siege of Paris by Henry IV, and strangled for his fidelity to his sovereign in 1591. He wrote, 1. 'De Verborum quæ ad Jus pertinent Significatione.' 2. 'De Formulæ et solemnibus Populi Romani Verbis,' fol. Paris. 1583. 3. 'De Regis Persarum Principatu,' &c. 8vo. 1580, 1590, 1599, 4to. 1606; but the best edition is that of Strasburgh, 8vo. 1710, with Sylburgius' notes.

BRISSOT, de Warville James Peter (Hist.) an active agent in the French Revolution, and a victim to the tyranny he had contributed to raise, was the son of an inn-keeper, of Chartres, where he was born in 1754. He headed a party called after him, Brissotins, who being borne down by a more sanguinary faction called the "Mountain," were to the number of 21, condemned to be guillotined, with their leader, in 1792.

BRISTOL, George, Earl of (Hist.) youngest son of John Digby, was born in 1510, sent as ambassador to Spain in 1611, and after serving the king as his minister, he assisted him with his arms, and died an exile in France, in 1652.

BRISTOL, John, second Earl of, the son of the preceding, distinguished himself no less than his father, by his loyalty to his sovereign, for which he suffered much in his estate. He was restored to his offices as secretary of state, and privy counsellor, on the restoration of Charles II, but forfeited them both by embracing the Romish religion, and died in 1676.

BRISTOL, John, first Earl of, of the second creation and family mentioned under Heraldry, was born in 1665, and after having distinguished himself in the House of Commons in several parliaments, was afterwards called up to the House of Peers, where he strenuously asserted the Hanoverian succession, and died in 1750.

BRISTOL, George William, second Earl of, and grandson of the preceding, was one of the six supporters of the pall at the funeral of Frederick prince of Wales; was nominated in 1758, ambassador extraordinary to the court of Spain, where he displayed great talents as a minister; and after having served his majesty as his privy counsellor, as lord lieutenant of Ireland, and in other important posts, he died in 1775, at the age of 54.

BRISTOL, Augustus John, third Earl of, and brother of the preceding, was bred to a sea life, in which he distinguished himself as a vigilant and skilful officer, and deservedly rose to the rank of an admiral. He was afterwards one of the lords of the Admiralty, and died in 1779, at the age of 56. His lordship had been married to Miss Chudleigh, who procured a divorce from him in order to marry the duke of Kingston; but it appearing afterwards that the decision had been fraudulently obtained, she was indicted in 1775 for bigamy, tried and found guilty; she was, however, as a peeress, discharged from corporal punishment, and retiring to the continent, died in 1788.

BRISTOL, Frederick, fourth Earl of (Ecc.) brother of the two preceding earls, was born in 1730, and having entered into holy orders, was promoted in 1767, to the bishopric of Cloyne, in Ireland; translated to that of Derry in 1768, and died a privy counsellor of that kingdom in 1803.

BRISTOL, Earl of (Her.) a title conferred on John Digby, the youngest son of George Digby, esq. who in 1722, was raised to the dignity of an earl. This title became extinct at the death of John, the third earl of Bristol, in 1698.

BRISTOL, Earl of, a title revived in the Hervey family, in the person of John, the eldest son of sir Thomas Hervey, above-mentioned under History, who was raised in 1703, to the dignity of baron Hervey, of Ixworth; and further advanced to that of earl of Bristol, in 1714. The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Hervey, earl of Bristol, and lord Hervey, of Ixworth.

Arms. Gules, on a bend argent, three trefoils slipped vert.

Crest. On a wreath, a leopard passant proper bezanty, ducally gorged and chained or, and holding a trefoil in his paw proper.

Supporters. Two leopards sable bezanty, ducally collared and chained or.

Motto. "Je n'oublieray jamais."

BRISTOW, Richard (Biog.) a champion for the Romish church in the reign of queen Elizabeth, who was educated at Oxford, and died in 1581, leaving 1. 'Dr. Bristow's Motives,' 8vo. Antwerp, 1574, 1599, and translated into Latin by Dr. Worthington, 4to. Duac. 1608. 2. 'A Reply to William Fulk, in Defence of Dr. Alan's Articles,' &c. 4to. 1580. 3. 'Fifty-one Demands to be proposed by Catholics to Heretics,' 4to. London, 1592. 4. 'Veritates Auree S. R. Ecclesiae,' 1616. 5. 'Tabula in Summam Theologicam S. Thome Aquinatis,' 1579, &c.

BRITANNIA (Geog.) or Britain, otherwise called Britannia Major, or Great Britain, to distinguish it in French from Britannia Minor, Britanny, which in French is called petite Bretagne, one of the most considerable islands in the habitable globe, which comprehended under it England, Scotland, and Wales. It was considered by the ancients as a remote and detached portion of the globe, which was, as it were, cut off from all the rest.

Silures	Brecknockshire, Herefordshire, Glamorganshire, Monmouthshire, Radnorshire.
Trinobantes . . .	Middlesex and Essex.

On the conquest of Britain by Julius Cæsar, it became a Roman province, and remained so for 400 years, during which time it was divided into Britannia Romana, and Britannia Barbara, the former of which comprehended the greater part of England; and the latter Caledonia, so called from its inhabitants, the Caledons; and afterwards Scotland, or the land of the Scottæ, another tribe of its inhabitants, which were also with others frequently included under the general name of Picts and Scots. The Britain of the Romans was separated by a wall which was first built by Adrian, as is supposed, between Solway Frith and Tintmouth; and was afterwards repaired, or others substituted in its place, by subsequent emperors.

The principal towns of Britain mentioned by ancient writers, with their modern names, are as follow:

Ancient.	Modern.
Londinum	London.
Durovernum, Cantuaria . .	Canterbury.
Eboracum	York.
Alata Castra	Edinburgh.

Severus, and Commodus, bear the inscriptions BRITANNIA.—BRITANNICUS EXERCITUS ADVENTUS AUG.—BRITANNIAE RESTITUTORI, the three last in allusion to the expedition of Adrian into Britain; also BRITANNIA COS. II. IIII, to which is sometimes added IMPERAT. PONT. MAX. TR. O, &c. She is mostly represented as in the annexed figure, under the form of a female sitting with a spear, and resting with her left arm on a shield; her right upon her knee, and her foot upon part of a wall, in allusion to the wall built by Adrian; sometimes she is sitting on a rock, having on her right a military standard; on her left a spear, and resting her arm on a shield, &c. Vaillant. Præst. tom. i.; Reg. Thes. tom. ii.; Patin. Imp. &c.

BRITANNICO, John Angelo (Biog.) a critical scholar of Brescia, left notes on Juvenal, Lucan, Horace, Persius, and Statius. His edition of the latter was published in fol. Venice, 1485; and his Juvenal, in fol. 1512.

BRITANNICUS (Hist.) a son of Claudius Caesar, so called because under that emperor part of Britain had been conquered by the Romans. He was poisoned by Nero, his competitor for the throne, and his corpse was buried in the night.

BRITANNICUS (Numis.) many medals were struck of this prince, bearing his effigy, as in the annexed figure, and the inscription ΚΑΛΥΔΙΟΣ ΒΡΕΤΑΝΝΙΚΟΣ ΚΑΙΣΑΡ; on others BRITANNICUS CAESAR AUG. F. PRIN. JUVENT.—BRITANNICUS TI. CLAUDIUS CAESAR AUG. F. Vaillant. Gr.; Spanh. Dissert.; Tristan. Comment. Hist.; Patin. Imp. &c.

BRITANNY (Geog.) one of the largest provinces of France, occupies the northwest corner of the kingdom, forming a peninsula, that is united on the E. to Maine, Anjou, and Poitou. Its principal towns are Nantes, Rennes, Quimper, Vannes, and St. Brienne.

History of Brittany.

Britanny, which formed a part of the ancient Armorica, was afterwards called Britannia Minor, in French petite Bretagne, in distinction from grande Bretagne, or the island of Great Britain; the inhabitants of which were originally the same. According to some writers Brittany was peopled by the natives of England, who fled from the oppressions of the Saxons; but other writers, on the other hand, suppose that the natives of Brittany gave the name of Britain to the island of Albion. When Maximus caused himself to be proclaimed emperor in England, in 382, he gave Brittany to one of his generals, named Conon, who established it into a kingdom, for himself and his successors, until the time of Clovis, who obliged these princes to take the name of counts; after which Brittany was partitioned out among several princes, until the time of Peter de Drieux, surnamed Mauclore, in 1213, who, with ten of his successors, governed Brittany, under the title of dukes. In 1491 it was united to the crown of France, by the marriage of Anne, the daughter of the last duke, with Charles VIII, and afterwards with Louis XII.

Ecclesiastical History of Brittany.

Paganism subsisted for a long time in Armorica, and when the Bretons peopled this country the worship of idols prevailed in almost all parts, except at Nantes. St. Clair, the first bishop of Nantes, in 277, preached the gospel at Rennes, Vannes, and the adjacent country. Of the succession of bishops in this country, little is known that is authentic in the early ages of Christianity. It was divided into nine dioceses, which since the revolution have been reduced to five.

BRITO, Bernard de (Biog.) a Portuguese historian of Almeida, in the 16th century, was the author of 'Monarchia Lusitanæ,' 2 vols. fol. Alcob. 1597; Oliss. 1609; which was brought down to Alphonso III, by Anthony and Francis Brandano, making in all 7 vols. fol.

- BRUCE (Hist.) or, as it was anciently written, Bruis or Brus, Robert le, a noble knight of Normandy, who, being in the confidence of William the Conqueror, was by him sent to subdue the northern parts of this realm. Farther mention is made of his family under Heraldry.
- BRUCE, or Bruis, Robert le, son of the preceding, was for some time in the confidence of David I, king of Scotland, but he fought on the English side at the famous Battle of the standard in 1138, at which he took his own son Robert le Brus, a youth of 14, prisoner. He was distinguished for his piety, which he displayed in the building of a monastery at Gysburne, or Gishorough, in Cleveland.
- BRUCE, Robert de, a descendant in the ninth degree from the preceding, was a competitor with John Baliol, for the crown of Scotland, but the decision was given in favour of the latter, by the direction of Edward I, who had been chosen umpire. He died in England, in 1295.

BRUCE, Robert, son of the preceding, did not give up his pretensions to the throne of Scotland, and hoping for the assistance of Edward I, he fought with him at the battles of Dunbar and Falkirk, and died in 1303.

BRUCE, Robert, son of the preceding, finally obtained the throne of Scotland, after the battle of Bannockburne, and reigning under the title of Robert I, died in 1329. [Vide Plate V]

BRUCE, David, son of the preceding, was king of Scotland, under the title of David II. His effigy is given as in the annexed figure.

BRUCE, Sir Edward de, brother to Robert I, king of Scotland, was, in reward for his services, created earl of Carrick, and being afterwards elected king of Ireland, he was defeated and slain in 1318.

BRUCE, Neil de, Thomas de, and Alexander de, younger brothers of the preceding, were all put to death by command of Edward I.

BRUCE, Sir Edward, lord Bruce, descended from another branch of this family, was constantly in the employ of James VI, king of Scotland, in whose quiet succession to the throne of England he was mainly instrumental. He died in 1613, in the 62d year of his age.

BRUCE, Edward, second lord Bruce, and son of the first lord, was killed in a duel in 1613, by sir Edward Sackville, afterwards earl of Dorset.

BRUCE, Robert, earl of Aylesbury. [Vide Aylesbury]

BRUCE (Her.) Bruis or Brus, a family of distinction in the time of William the Conqueror, has ever since preserved its rank and consequence, as may be seen under the head of History. The first-mentioned Robert de Brus was rewarded by the Conqueror for his services, with no less than 43 lordships in the East and West Ridings of Yorkshire, and 51 in the North Riding, where the manor and castle of Skelton was the capital of the barony. His son Robert, the second lord of Skelton, obtained from king David I, of Scotland, the lordship of Annandale. From this Robert was lineally descended Robert I, king of Scotland, who was the seventh lord of Annandale, and first earl of Carrick, in right of his mother. From John de Bruis, the third son of the fifth lord of Annandale, descended sir Edward Bruce, of Kinloss, second son of sir Edward Bruce, of Blairhall, who was created in 1603, lord Bruce; and Thomas his grandson, was created in 1633, earl of Elgin, and farther advanced to the degree of a baron of England, by the title of lord Bruce, of Whorlton, co. York. Robert his son, the second earl of Elgin, was created baron Bruce of Skelton, co. York, viscount Bruce of Amptill, co. Bedford, and earl of Aylesbury, co. Bucks, which titles became extinct at the death of Charles, third earl of Aylesbury, in whom ended the male line of the aforesaid Edward lord Bruce, of Kinloss, second son of sir Edward Bruce, of Blairhall. The dignity of lord Bruce, of Tottenham, devolved to the hon. Thomas Bruce Brudenell, third earl of Cardigan, who by marriage was allied to the family of Bruce. [Vide Aylesbury] The honours of earl of Elgin, and lord Bruce, of Kinloss, devolved to Charles Bruce, ninth earl of Kincardin, who was descended from sir George Bruce, younger brother to Edward lord Bruce, of Kinloss, before-mentioned. BRUNSWICK (Geog.) a country of Lower Saxony, in Germany, bounded on the N. by Luneburg, on the W. by Westphalia, on the S. by Hesse and Eichsfeld, and on the E. by Thuringia, Anhalt, Halberstadt, and Magdeburg. It is divided into four duchies and two counties. The duchies of Brunswick Proper and Brunswick Wolfenbüttele, with the counties of Rheinstein and Blankenburg, are subject to the duke of Brunswick Wolfenbüttele; while the elector of Hanover was duke of Brunswick Grubenhagen, and Brunswick Calenberg, which also included the district of Gottingen.

BRUNSWICK, in Latin Brunopolis, the capital of the duchy of Brunswick, is said to have been built about 868, by Bruno, the son of Adolphus, duke of Saxony. It is seated on the Ocker, 7 m. N. by E. Wolfenbüttele, and 68 S. Luneburg. Lon. 10° 47' E., lat. 52° 16' N. It was besieged by Henry the Younger, in 1542, 1550, and 1553, during which it suffered very much; as also in consequence of the differences which it had with its own dukes, at subsequent periods. It was, however, reduced to submission by Frederick Ulric, who laid siege to it in 1614, and has since that time been the ducal residence.

BRUNSWICK, House of (Hist.) is one of the oldest in Germany, and traces its origin to Azo I, marquis d'Est, who lived in the 11th century. By his marriage with Cunegonde, sister of Guelph III, of the ancient family of the Guelphs, he had Guelph d'Est I, duke of Bavaria, from whom descended Henry, surnamed the Lion, one of the most powerful princes in Germany. He revolted against the emperor, Frederic I, and was put to the ban of the empire; but afterwards recovered the counties of Brunswick and Luneburg. His son, Otho IV, who was emperor, erected these states into duchies, in favour of his brother William, about 1218, although, according to some historians, this event took place in 1235, under the emperor Frederic II.

BRUNSWICK, Ernest Augustus, the youngest son of George, duke of Brunswick, rendered such assistance to the emperor in his wars against Louis XIV, that he was invested with the electoral dignity in 1688.

BRUNSWICK, George Lewis, Duke of, rendered great assistance to the emperor against the Turks; and after distinguishing himself in the war between the emperor and Louis XIV, he died in 1727, aged 68.

BRUNSWICK, Maximil. Jul. Leopold, Duke of, nephew to the king of Prussia, in whose army he served, was drowned in 1785, aged 73, in attempting to rescue the unfortunate inhabitants near Francfort, during the inundation of the Oder.

BRUNSWICK-OELS, Frederic Augustus, Duke of (Hist.) a general of infantry in the Prussian service, was born in 1741, and died in 1805, after having distinguished himself both as a warrior and a statesman. He also translated several things from the French, and wrote in German 'The Military History of Prince Frederic Augustus, of Brunswick-Lunebourg, &c. 4to. 1797.

BRUSSELS (Geog.) a large and handsome city of Brabant, capital of the southern provinces of the Netherlands, and the second city in the kingdom after Amsterdam. It is situated partly on an eminence and partly on the river Senne, 25 m. S. Antwerp, 26 S. E. Ghent, and 155 N. N. E. Paris. Lon. 4° 22' E., lat. 50° 50' N.

History of Brussels.

This city owed its origin to St. Gery, bishop of Cambrai, who in the commencement of the seventh century built a chapel on a small island, by the Senne, and collected people by his preaching. In 1044 it was encompassed by a wall, which was demolished by the emperor Joseph II. In 1695 it was bombarded for the space of 46 hours, by the French under marshal Villeroy, when 14 churches and above 4000 houses were consumed. In 1706 it was delivered up to the duke of Marlborough; and in 1708 it was attacked by the duke of Bavaria, who was obliged to retire at the approach of the allies. In 1746 it was taken by the French under marshal Saxe; but restored at the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle. In the revolutionary troubles of the last century Brussels took the lead, and fell into the hands of the French with the rest of the country.

BRYDGES (Hist.) or Brugge, Sir Simon de, lord of Brugge-upon-Wye, now Bridge Solers, [vide Brydges, under Heraldry] was a partisan in the rebellion of Simon de Montfort, earl of Leicester, against Henry III, whereby he incurred the forfeiture of that lordship.

BRYDGES, Sir John, vide Chandos.

BRYDGES, or Bridges, Sir Thomas, of Reinsham, distinguished himself for his loyalty during the rebellion.

BRYDGES, Sir John, a baronet, from another branch of the same family, took the side of the rebels, for which his castle at Wilton was burnt to the ground.

BRYDGES (Her.) the name of an ancient and honourable family, which was originally written Brugge. From Sir Simon de Brugge above-mentioned, descended sir John Brydges, in the reign of Henry VIII, who was created by queen Mary in 1554 a peer of this realm, by the title of baron Chandos, of Sudley. James, the ninth baron Chandos, was created viscount Wilton, and earl of Caernarvon, in 1714; marquis of Caernarvon, and duke of Chandos, in 1719, all which titles became extinct at the death of the third duke of Chandos; but the barony of Chandos was claimed by the Rev. Edward Tinnewell Brydges, on the ground that he was descended from Anthony, the third son of the first lord Chandos; but his claim was disallowed, after repeated hearings in the House of Lords.

BRYDGES, the above-mentioned remaining branch of this family, at present enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred, in 1812, on sir Samuel Egerton Brydges, who, on the death of his elder brother, put in his unsuccessful claims to the barony of Chandos. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Argent, on a cross sable, a leopard's face or, to which the present baronet has obtained a licence to add, as a perpetual memorial of his descent from the noble house of Egerton, the bearings of that ancient and illustrious family, i. e. in the first quarter a lion rampant gules, holding between the paws a pheon's head sable, and two pheons' heads transfixing the leopard's face in the upper and lower parts or.

Crest. A Saracen's head in profile, habited argent, collar gules, on the head a cap or, charged with a pheon sable, as is also the breast of the Saracen.

Motto. "Maintien le droit."

BRYEN Theodore de (Biog.) an engraver of Liege, was born in 1528; and died in 1598. His principal works were the Plates for Boissard's Antiquities.

BRYENNIUS, Nicephorus (Hist.) surnamed the Elder, duke of Dyrrachium, was a competitor for the empire with Alexius Comnenus; but being defeated in battle, and taken prisoner by the latter, his eyes were put out. Ann. Comnen. l. 1; Niceph. Bryenn. l. 1.

BRYENNIUS, Nicephorus, surnamed the Younger, who married Anna Comnena, the daughter of Alexius Comnenus, was invested with the dignity of Cæsar. Irene, his mother-in-law, and Anna his wife, wished him to succeed Alexius, at his death; but the emperor declared his son John to be successor. Bryennius died in 1137, after his return from the siege of Antioch, leaving a history of the reigns of Isaac Comnenus and his three successors, which was published with a Latin version by the Jesuit Poussines, Paris, 1661; to which were added the notes of Du Cange, 1670. It has since been inserted in the edition of Byzantine Writers, 35 vols. fol. Venet. 1729. Nicet. l. 1, c. 1.

BRYENNIUS, Manuel (Biog.) the last writer on music in the Greek language, of whom we have any account. He flourished in the reign of the elder Palæologus, and left a work on music, divided into three books, in Greek, of which Meibomius begun a Latin translation that was finished by Dr. Wallis, and inserted in the third volume of his works, 3 vols. fol. Oxon. 1699.

BUAT-NANCY, Louis Gabriel du (Hist.) a French nobleman, who was born at Livarot, in Normandy, in 1732, and died in 1787, was employed as a minister plenipotentiary in most of the courts of Germany, and left, among his works as an author, 1. 'Tableau du Gouvernement de l'Allemagne,' 12mo. 1765. 2. 'Origines ou l'Ancien Gouvernement de l'Allemagne,' 4 vols. 8vo. 1757. 3. 'L'Histoire Ancienne des Peuples de l'Europe,' 12 vols. 12mo. 1772. 4. 'Recherches sur l'Histoire d'Allemagne,' 2 vols. fol. 1772. 5. 'Maximes du Gouvernement Monarchique,' 4 vols. 8vo. 1789, &c.

BUBASTIS (Geog.) a city of Egypt, in the eastern parts of the Delta, where cats were held in great veneration. Herodot. l. 2, c. 59; Strab. l. 17; Ovid. Met. l. 9; Gratian. Cyneg. c. 42.

BUC, Sir John (Hist.) a knight of the ancient family of Bucs, or Bucks, in Yorkshire, and of Melford Hall, in Suffolk, was one of king Richard the Third's favourites, whom he attended at the battle of Bosworth; and, being attainted as one of his chief aiders and abettors, was soon after beheaded.

Buc, Sir George (Biog.) great grandson of the preceding, who was knighted by king James the day before his coronation, was the author of 'The Life and Reign of Richard III,' in five books, in which he endeavoured to remove the odium with which the memory of that prince is loaded. It has been a matter of dispute, but with apparently little reason, whether this Sir George Buc, or G. Buc, esq. his son, were the author of this history. He also wrote 'The Third Universitie of England,' and a treatise entitled 'The Art of Revels.'

BUCCLEUGH and MONMOUTH, Duke of (Hist.) vide Monmouth.

Buccleugh, Duke of (Her.) one of the titles at present enjoyed by the ancient and honourable family of Scott, of Buccleugh, which has been successively advanced to the dignities of a baron, earl, and duke. [Vide Scott] The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Scott, duke of Buccleugh and Queensbury, marquis of Dumfriesshire, earl of Drumlanrig, Buccleugh, Sarkquhar, and Dalkeith, viscount Nith, Thortholdwild, and Ross, baron Douglas, of Kinmont, Meddlebie, Dornock, Scott, of Whitchurch and Eckdale, in Scotland; earl of Doncaster, co. York, and baron Tyndale, co. Northumberland in England.

Arms. Quarterly; 1. The arms of England, as borne by Charles II, with a baton sinister argent. 2. For Montagu argent three fusils in fess gules. 3. For Monthermer, or an eagle displayed vert, beaked and membered gules. 4. For Scott, or, a bend azure, charged with a star of six points, between two crescents of the field over all, on an escutcheon, the arms of Montagu quartered with Monthermer.

Crest. Upon a chapeau gules, turned up ermine, a dragon passant or, chained and gorged with a crown of the same.

Supporters. Dexter, an unicorn argent, armed, maned, and unguled or, gorged with a crown and chained gules, for Scott.

Sinister a griffin or, beaked and winged sable, for Montagu.

BUCEPHALUS (Hist.) Βουκέφαλος, i. e. from βῦς and κεφαλος, or ox's head; the well-known horse of Alexander, so called from the largeness of its head, like an ox. No one could mount this horse but Alexander; and, when it was wounded in the battle, it hastened out, and dropped down dead after it had placed its master out of danger. Alexander built a city which he called Bucephala after its name. Plin. l. 8, c. 42; Justin. l. 11; Arrian. l. 5; Plut. in Alex.

BUCEPHALUS (Numis.) this horse is represented on some medals of Alexander the Great, as in the annexed figure, where Alexander is standing by a horse naked, and two other figures are near him looking on, supposed to be his father Philip, and his mother Olympias. Haverkamp. Num. Contra.

BUCER, Martin (Biog.) a Dominican of Alsace, was one of Luther's principal coadjutors in bringing about the reformation. He married three wives, the first of whom, like himself, broke her vows of celibacy. His writings, in German and English, on theological subjects, would make, as is said, eight or nine folio volumes.

BUCHAN, Isabel, Countess of (Hist.) wife of John Cumyn, earl of Buchan, placed the crown on the head of Robert Bruce at his coronation in 1306; but, falling into the hands of Edward I, she was confined in the castle of Berwick-upon-Tweed, from which confinement she was delivered on the accession of Edward II.

BUCHAN, John Stewart, Earl of, who, for his valour, was surnamed the Brave John-O-Coul, was sent in 1476 to England to complete the treaty for the release of James I, in which he was unsuccessful. He afterwards distinguished himself in France at the head of 7000 Scotch auxiliaries, who were sent to the assistance of Charles VII, by whom he was made constable of France. He was slain at the battle of Verneuil in 1424.

BUCHAN, James Stewart, Earl of, surnamed Hearty James, uterine brother of king James II, was constituted high-chamberlain of Scotland in 1471 on the fall of lord Boyd; and in 1473, he was sent ambassador to France, when he obtained a safe conduct for passing through England.

BUCHAN, William Erskine, Earl of, adhered to the party of James II at the revolution in 1688; but, falling into the hands of William, he died a prisoner in the castle of Stirling in 1695.

BUCHAN, Earl of (Her.) a title which is at present enjoyed by the Erskine family. The first earl of Buchan on record is Fergus, who flourished about the time of William the Lion. In 1321 William Cumyn became earl of Buchan in right of his wife; and in 1371 a grant of this earldom was obtained from Robert II. by sir Alexander Stewart, his fourth son; and, at his death, it was granted to John Stewart, duke of Albany, and was forfeited to the crown by Murda, duke of Albany, in 1406, but in 1466 it was given to James Stewart before-mentioned. By the marriage of Christian, countess of Buchan, with Robert Douglas, he became earl of Buchan in 1469; and, by the marriage of Mary Douglas, countess of Buchan, with James Erskine, son of John, earl of Marr, this earldom passed into that family, by whom it is now enjoyed. [Vide Erskine] The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Erskine, earl of Buchan, lord Cardross and Auchterhouse.

Arms. 1. Quarterly, azure, three garbs or, the feudal arms of the earldom of Buchan. 2. Quarterly, 1st and 4th azure a bend between six crosslets fitchee or, for Marr; 2d and 3d argent, a pale sable, for Erskine. 3. Quarterly, 1st and 4th or, a fess cheque azure and argent, for Stewart of Kirkhill; 2d and 3d azure three garbs or, for Cumyn; 4th argent three bars gemelles gules, surmounted of a lion rampant sable, armed and membered azure, for Fairfar. Over all gules, an eagle displayed or, looking towards the sun in its splendour, placed towards the dexter chief point being a coat of augmentation for the lordship of Cardross.

Crest. A dexter-arm holding a club or baton raguled proper.

Supporters. Two ostriches proper.

Motto. "Judge nought."

BUCHAN, William (Biog.) a physician, who was born at An-cram in 1729, and died in 1805, left, 1. 'Domestic Medicine,' of which 19 editions were published in his life-time. 2. 'Advice to Mothers.' 3. 'Treatise on the Venereal Disease,' &c.

BUCHANAN, George (Biog.) a Scotch historian and poet, of an ancient family in Lennoxshire, was born in 1506, and died in 1582, leaving, 1. 'Detectio Marie Reginae,' 1571. 2. 'De Jure Regni,' 1579. 3. 'Historie Scotie Libri XX,' 1582; besides his translation of the Psalms in Latin verse, and other poems in Latin.

BUCHARIA (Geog.) vide Buckharia.

BUCHOLTZER (Biog.) or Bucholcer, Abraham, a German reformer, who died in 1584, composed a chronology from the beginning of the world to the year 1580, under the title of 'Magoge Chronologica,' 1580, often reprinted since.

BUCK, Samuel (Biog.) an English engraver, who died in 1779 in the 85th year of his age, executed views of the several towns of England and Wales.

BUCKERIDGE, John (Ecc.) an English prelate, after being educated at Oxford, was promoted to the see of Rochester in 1611, and died in 1631. His works are, 1. 'De Potestate Papæ in Rebus Temporalibus,' &c. 4to. Lond. 1614. 2. 'A Discourse on Kneeling at the Communion, &c.'

BUCKHOLD, John (Hist.) a butcher of Leyden, who headed the fanatical anabaptists of Munster, over whom he acted the part of a king. This city being captured after an obstinate siege, he was taken and put to an ignominious death in 1536.

BUCKHURST (Hist.) vide Sackville.

BUCKINGHAM, Humphry Stafford, Duke of (Hist.) sixth earl of Stafford, fell at the battle of Northampton, on the royalist side, in 1460.

BUCKINGHAM, Henry Stafford, Duke of, grandson of the preceding, was the principal instrument of raising Richard III to the throne; but, conspiring soon after against the newly raised monarch, he perished on the scaffold in the first year of his reign, 1483.

BUCKINGHAM, Edward Stafford, Duke of, son of the preceding, provoked the resentment of Cardinal Wolsey, in consequence of which he was brought to trial on a charge of having consulted a fortune-teller respecting his succession to the crown, and being convicted, was beheaded in 1521.

BUCKINGHAM, George Villiers, Duke of, the favourite of James I and Charles I, by whom he was loaded with titles and honours, was born at Brooksby, in Leicestershire, attended Charles as prince of Wales into Spain, in order to solicit the hand of the infanta, was sent into France, at the death of king James, to conduct the princess Henrietta Maria into England, and as he was preparing to embark for the relief of Rochelle, he was assassinated in 1628 by one Felton at the age of 36.

BUCKINGHAM, George Villiers, Duke of, son of the preceding, was born in 1628, adhered to king Charles I, during the rebellion; and, after his murder, escaped to the continent, where he attended in the suite of Charles II. At the restoration, he regained his estates, and, for some time, was high in favour with the king; but, after wasting his property by his extravagances, and losing his friends by his unsteady conduct, he died in a poor cottage in Yorkshire in 1687. He is known as one of the cabal who had the chief management of affairs in 1671; but still more so as the paramour of the infamous lady Shrewsbury, whose lord he killed in a duel. Among his works, as an author, his 'Rehearsal,' a comedy printed in 1762, is reckoned a masterpiece of wit; besides which he wrote several other dramatic pieces, some poems, and also some prose pieces; namely, 'An Essay upon Reason and Religion;' 'A Short Discourse upon the Reasonableness of Men's having a Religion or Worship of God,' printed in 1685, which passed through three editions.

BUCKINGHAM, Duke of (Her.) a title conferred on Humphry Stafford above-mentioned, in 1444, which became extinct at the death of the third duke in 1551. It was revived in 1623 in the person of George Villiers above-mentioned, and became again extinct at the death of the second duke in 1687. [Vide Buckingham under History]

BUCKINGHAM, Duke of, one of the titles enjoyed by the Grenville family [vide Grenville], which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Temple—Nugent—Brydges—Chandos—Grenville, duke and marquis of Buckingham and Chandos, earl Temple, viscount and baron Cobham, in the United Kingdom, and earl Nugent, in Ireland.

Arms. Vert, on a cross argent, five torteaux, for Grenville.

Crest. On a wreath a garb vert.

Supporters. On the dexter, a lion party per fesse embattled or and gules, on the sinister a horse argent, powdered with eaglets sable.

Motto. "Templa quam dilecta."

BUCKINGHAMSHIRE, John, Duke of (Hist.) a statesman and a poet of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was born in 1649, and died in 1720, after having been in the service of king James II, to whom he remained attached to the end, and afterwards in that of queen Anne and king George I. His works, both in prose and poetry, were published by his duchess in 2 vols. 4to. 1723, 1729, and 1740.

BUCKINGHAMSHIRE, Duke of (Her.) a title conferred in 1694 on sir John Sheffield, third earl of Mulgrave, above-mentioned, which became extinct at the death of his son Edmund, the second duke, in 1795.

BUCKINGHAMSHIRE, Earl of, one of the titles at present enjoyed by the Hobart family [vide Hobart], which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Hobart, earl of Buckinghamshire, lord Hobart, baron Hobart, of Blickling, co. Norfolk, and Viscount Arms. Sable, a pale of eight rays or, between two fanches ermine.

Crest. On a wreath, a bull passant, party per pale sable and gules, all besmy, and a ring in his nose or.

Supporters. On the dexter-side a stag, on the sinister a talbot, both proper and regardant, each having a radiant collar and line or.

Motto. "Auctor pretiosa facit."

BUCKINGHAMSHIRE (Geog.) a county of England, bounded on the N. by Northamptonshire, on the E. by Bedfordshire, Hertfordshire, and Middlesex, on the S. by Berkshire, and on the W. by Oxfordshire. It is supposed to have been inhabited by a people called Cattieuchlani, or Cassii, the subjects of Cassivellanus; but nothing authentic is known of its history before the time of Edward the Elder, who built a fortress at Buckingham about 912. It was also the theatre of the civil wars between king John and his barons, and afterwards of that which raged during the rebellion.

BUCKLAND, Ralph (Biog.) a divine of the Romish church, who was educated at Oxford, and died in 1611, leaving, 1. A translation of the 'Lives of the Saints,' from Surius. 2. 'A Persuasive against frequenting Protestant Churches,' 12mo. 3. 'Seven Sparks of the enkindled Flame, composed in the Hard Times of Queen Elizabeth,' 12mo. 4. BURY (Geog.) or St. Edmund's Bury, a town in the county of Suffolk, which in Latin was called Villa Faustini, or Fanum S. Edmundi, and derives its present name from St. Edmund, who was buried here, after having been killed by the Danes at Hoxne. An abbey was erected on the spot where he was buried, the ruins of which attest that it was one of the grandest buildings of the kind. In the reign of king John the barons met here to form their league against this prince; and in 1446 Henry VI called a parliament in this town respecting the duke of Gloucester, who was imprisoned, and, as is supposed, poisoned at that time. The town suffered greatly from fire in 1608. It is seated on the Larke, a branch of the Ouse, 25 miles N. W. Ipswich, and 71 N. N. E. London. Lon. 0° 46' E. lat. 52° 22' N.

BUS, Cæsar de (Ecc.) founder of the society of priests, or fathers of the Christian doctrine, was born in 1544, and died in 1607. He left a book of instructions for his society.

BUSH, Paul (Ecc.) first bishop of Bristol, was born in 1490, became a student of Oxford in 1513; and, after spending some years among the friars of St. Austin, now Wadham College, was promoted to the see of Bristol in 1542, and died in 1553, after having been deprived of his bishopric by queen Mary. He left some works on religious subjects.

BUSHEL, Thomas (Hist.) master of the royal mines in Wales, who was educated at Baliol College, Oxford, distinguished himself for his loyalty during the rebellion, and coined money for the king, which he sent to Oxford. At the Restoration, he obtained a licence to work the lead mines of Mendip, in Somersetshire, and died in 1674, aged 80. He published, 1. 'A Just and True Remonstrance of his Majesty's Mines Royal in Wales,' 4to. London, 1642. 2. 'An Abstract of the Lord Chancellor Bacon's Philosophical Theory of Mineral Prosecutions,' London, 1660; besides songs and poetical addresses, which were made on the occasion of his majesty and the queen having paid him a visit.

BUSIRIS (Myth.) Βούσιρις, a king of Egypt, and son of Neptune, who is said to have sacrificed all foreigners to Jupiter; but, in attempting to bind Hercules for this purpose, the hero disengaged himself, and sacrificed both Busiris and his son Amphidamus on the altar intended for himself. He is said to have built the city of Thebes. Hesiod. l. 2, c. 59, &c.; Apollod. l. 2; Strab. l. 17; Ovid. Met. l. 9; Plut. in Theb.

BUSLIDIUS (Hist.) or Busliden, John, a native of Arlon, in Luxemburg, whose brother Francis was archbishop of Besançon in 1500, was employed on embassies to pope Julius II, Francis I of France, and Henry VIII of England, and died at Bourdeaux in 1517 on his way into Spain on a mission to Charles V. He founded three professorships at Louvain for Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, and left several verses, epistles, and speeches, &c. published after his death.

BUSSIERES, John de (Biog.) a French Jesuit and a poet, was born in 1607, and died in 1698. His Latin poems, published in 8vo. Lugd. 1671, are still esteemed. He likewise wrote in prose, 1. 'Flosculi Historiarum,' afterwards translated into French by the title of 'Parterre Historique,' 12mo. Lyons, 1672. 2. 'Mémoires de Ville Franche en Beaujolais,' 4to. 1671, &c.

BUTE, Sir James Stuart, Earl of (Hist.) a privy counsellor in the reign of queen Anne, was one of the peers who dissented from the union in 1706. He died in 1710.

BUTR, John Stuart, Earl of, son of the preceding, well known as prime minister in the early part of the reign of George III, was elected one of the 16 peers for Scotland in 1736, made a lord of the police in 1737, appointed in 1738 one of the lords of the bed-chamber to his royal highness Frederic, prince of Wales, groom of the stole to his late majesty when prince of Wales; and, on his accession, sworn of his privy council, and appointed groom of the stole to his majesty, on the resignation of which, he was appointed in 1761 one of his majesty's principal Secretaries of State, and Ranger of Richmond Park; in 1762 first lord of the treasury, which he resigned the same year; and, after spending 26 or 27 years in the most perfect retirement, he died in 1792.

Bute, Marquis of (Her.) one of the titles at present enjoyed by a branch of the Stuart family, conferred in 1796 on John Stewart, fourth earl of Bute. [Vide Stuart] The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Stuart, marquis of Bute, earl of Windsor, co. Berks, viscount Mountjoy, of the Isle of Wight; baron of Mountstuart, of Wortley, co. York; baron Cardiff, of Cardiff Castle, co. Glamorgan, in the peerage of the United Kingdom; earl of Dumfries and Bute; viscount Ayr, Mountstuart, and Kingarf; baron Crichton, of Sanguhar; lord Cumnock, Cumra, and Inchmarnock, in the peerage of Scotland; and baronet.

Motto. "Avito viret honore."

BUTES (Myth.) a son of Teleon and Zeuxippe, and a descendant from Amycus, king of Bebryce, was slain by Daes at the funeral games given in honour of Hector. Apollod. l. 1; Virg. Æn. l. 5, v. 372; Hygin, Fab. 14, &c.

BUTHROTUM (Geog.) now Butrinto, a sea-port of Epirus, opposite Corcyra, visited by Æneas in his way into Italy. Æc. ad Attic. l. 16, cp. 16; Virg. Æn. l. 3; Plin. l. 4.

BUTLER, Theobald (Hist.) of the ancient family mentioned under Heraldry, attended king Henry II into France, when that prince came to an agreement with the French king relative to Thomas à Becket. He afterwards attended the king to Ireland, where he served in the reduction of the kingdom, and was rewarded with large possessions, having also the butlership of Ireland conferred upon him in 1177. He died in 1206.

BUTLER, Hubert, the younger brother of the preceding, was born at West-Derham, in Norfolk, accompanied Richard I to the Holy Land, where he was taken prisoner while besieging Acon. He was promoted to the see of Salisbury in 1189, and to that of Canturbury on his return from the crusade; and, after serving the king as chancellor, chief justice, and treasurer of England, he died in 1205.

BUTLER, Theobald, the fourth Butler of Ireland, assisted king Edward I in his wars with Scotland, and died in 1285.

BUTLER, Theobald, son of the preceding, also accompanied the king in his wars with Scotland, and died in 1299.

BUTLER, James, vide Ormond.

BUTLER (Her.) the name of an ancient and illustrious family in Ireland, descended from Herveus, a commander in the army of the Conqueror, from whom he obtained great possessions in the counties of Norfolk, Suffolk, and Lancaster. The present name of Butler is, in all probability, derived from the office of butler or cup-bearer to the king, which was conferred, as before stated under History, on Theobald, one of the descendants of the before-mentioned Herveus; but the name was not assumed before the time of Edmund, who in 1302 sat in Parliament as a baron, by the name of Edmund le Botiller. He was created in 1315, for his services against Edward Bruce, and also against the rebellious Irish, earl of Carrick Macgriffyne, in the county of Tipperary. From John Butler, the second son of this Edmund, the present earl of Carrick, derives his descent. [Vide Carrick] James Butler, the eldest son of Edmund, was created earl of Ormond in 1328. James, the fifth earl of Ormond, was created in 1449 a peer of England by the title of earl of Wiltshire, which became extinct at his death in 1461. John, the sixth earl of Ormond, was in 1495 summoned as a baron to the English Parliament by the title of Thomas Ormond de Rochford, which title became extinct at his death. Sir Pierre Butler, the eighth earl of Ormond, was created in 1527 earl of Ossory. Richard, the second son of the eighth earl of Ormond, was created viscount Mountgarret; and Edmund, the twelfth viscount, was advanced to the dignity of earl of Kilkenny in 1593. James, the ninth earl, was created viscount Thurles in 1535. James, the twelfth earl of Ormond, was created in 1642 marquis of Ormond, and in 1662 duke of Ormond. Thomas, his eldest son, was summoned in 1662 to the Irish Parliament by the title of earl of Ossory, and in 1665 to the English Parliament by the title of lord Butler, of More Park. Richard, his fifth son, was created in 1662 baron Butler, of Cloughgrenan, viscount of Tullogh, and earl of Arran; and in 1663 lord Butler, of Weston, in England, which titles became extinct at his death; but Charles, second son of his eldest brother Thomas, was created baron of Cloughgrenan, viscount of Tullogh, and earl of Arran, and also a baron of England, by the title of lord Butler, all which titles became extinct at his death, without issue, in 1758; so likewise the titles of his uncle John, the seventh son of the first duke of Ormond, who was in 1676 created baron of Agherim, viscount of Clonmore, and earl of Gowran, and died without issue in 1677. The honours of the second duke of Ormond being extinguished by his attainder, John Butler, a descendant from a younger brother of the first duke, became, on the reversal of the attainder, earl of Ormond; and his son, the 17th earl, was in 1801 created an English peer by the title of lord Butler, of Llanthony, and in 1816 was advanced to the dignity of marquis of Ormond. The titles enjoyed by the family at present, together with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Butler, marquis of Ormond, co. Tipperary; earl of Ormond and Ossory; viscount Thurles; baron of Arklow, in Ireland; and lord Butler, of Llanthony, co. Monmouth, in the peerage of the United Kingdom.

Arms. Or, a chief indented azure.

Crest. On a ducal coronet or, a double plume of five ostrich feathers, and thence on a wreath a falcon rising, all argent.

Supporters. On the dexter-side, a falcon with wings expanded argent, beaked and membered or; on the sinister a male griffin beaked, membered, radiant, and gorged, with a collar and chain or.

Motto. "Depressus extollor."

BUTLER, the name of another family descended from John Butler, of Waresly, in the county of Huntingdon, who was living there in 1376 in the reign of Edward III. The first of this family that was ennobled was Theophilus Butler, who was created in 1715 baron of Newton-Bulbi; and Brinsley, the second lord, was advanced in 1728 to the dignity of viscount of Lanesborough; and Humphry, the second viscount, was further advanced in 1756 to that of earl of Lanesborough.

BUTLER, Joseph (Ecc.) a prelate, who was born at Wantage, in Berkshire, in 1692, was admitted a commoner of Oriel College, Oxford, in 1714, and after passing through different preferments, was nominated to the see of Bristol in 1738; translated to that of Durham in 1750, and died in 1752. He is well known as the author of 'The Analogy of Religion, Natural and Revealed, to the Constitution and Course of Nature,' first printed in 1736.

BUTLER, John, an English prelate, who was born at Ham-burgh, in 1717, was promoted to the see of Oxford in 1777, and translated in 1788 to that of Hereford, over which he presided until his death in 1802. He published some sermons, and also some political tracts in favour of lord North's administration.

BUTLER, Charles (Biog.) an English divine of High Wycomb, in Buckinghamshire, was born in 1539, educated at Oxford, and died vicar of Laurence Wotton, in Hampshire, in 1647, leaving, 1. 'The Feminine Monarchy,' or 'A Treatise on Bees,' 8vo. Oxon. 1649, and 4to. 1634, and Lond. 1623, translated into Latin by Rich. Richardson, of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, 8vo. Lond. 1673. 2. 'Rhetoricæ Libri Duo,' Oxon. 1618, and often reprinted. 3. 'De Propinquitatibus, Matrimonium impediens Regula Generalis,' 4to. Oxon. 1625. 4. 'Oratoricæ Libri Duo,' 4to. Oxon. 1633, 8vo. Lond. 1635. 5. 'English Grammar,' 4to. Oxford, 1634. 6. 'Principles of Music,' 4to. London, 1636.

BUTLER, Samuel, the well-known author of Hudibras, was born at Strangsham, in Worcestershire, in 1612, and died in 1680, very ill requited for the service he had done to the cause of religion, by holding up hypocrisy and puritanical cant to just ridicule and contempt. A monument has since been erected to his memory, in Westminster, by Mr. Barber, a printer, and mayor of London. Thyer published his posthumous works in 3 vols. His Hudibras was published in 1663, and the second part in 1664; the best edition is that by Dr. Zachary Grey, in 2 vols. 8vo.

BUTLER, Alban, author of the 'Lives of the Saints,' was born in 1710, and died in 1773. His Lives of the Saints were first published in 5 vols. 4to. 1745, afterwards in 12 vols. 8vo. Dublin, 1779, or 1780, and Edinburgh, 1799-1800. He likewise published 'Letters on the History of the Popes.'

BUTLER, William, a physician, and native of Derbyshire, who died in 1805, published, 1. 'A Method of Cure for the Stone,' &c. 12mo. 1754. 2. 'A Treatise on the Worn-fever,' 8vo. 1782. 3. 'An Improved Method of opening the Temporal Artery,' 1783, &c.

BUXENTUM (Geog.) a town of Lucania, in Italy, now Policastro, near the Tyrrhene Sea. Liv. l. 32, &c.

BUXTON (Her.) the name of a family of Shadwell, of which mention is made as early as Edward IV. It enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1800 on sir Robert John Buxton. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow: Arms. Argent, a lion rampant, the tail elevated and turned over the head sable.

Crest. A buck's head embossed gules, attired or.

BUXTORF, John (Biog.) the first of a learned family of Cambri, in Westphalia, was born in 1564, and died in 1629, leaving, 1. 'Lexicon Chaldaicum,' &c. Basil. 1639. 2. 'A Small Dictionary of Hebrew and Chaldaic Words in the Bible.' 3. 'Treasury of the Hebrew Grammar,' 2 vols. 8vo. 4. 'A Hebrew Bible,' 4 vols. fol. Basil. 1618. 5. 'Synagoga Judaica,' 8vo. 1682. 6. 'Concordantia Hebraica,' published by his son, in 1632. 7. 'Bibliotheca Rabbinica,' &c.

BUXTORF, John, son of the preceding, who died in 1664, wrote 'Tractatus de Punctorum Vocalium et Accentuum in Libris Veteris Testamenti Hebraicis Origine Antiquitate et Auctoritate,' Basil. 1648, besides translating some of the Rabbinas.

BUXTORF, John James, son or nephew to the preceding, who died in 1704, succeeded his father or uncle in the Oriental professorship at Basil, and made various translations from Rabbinical works, besides adding a supplement to the 'Bibliotheca Rabbinica,' of the first John.

Buxtorf, John, a fourth of this family, who held the oriental professorship, died in 1732, leaving several treatises on the Hebrew language.

BUZ (Bibl.) בּוּז, son of Nahor and Milcah, and brother to Hug. Gen. xxii. 20.

Buz, son of Abdiel, and father of Jahdo, of Judah. 1 Chron. v. 14.

BUZYGES (Biog.) an Athenian, who first ploughed with harnessed oxen, although the introduction of this practice has been ascribed to Triptolemus.

BYAM, Henry (Hist.) a clergyman and distinguished loyalist in the time of the rebellion, was born in 1580, educated at Oxford, and died in 1669, canon of Exeter, and prebendary of Wells, after having suffered much both in his person, his family, and his estate, for his adherence to the royal cause. Four of his sons were captains in the king's army, and he himself not only assisted in raising men and horse for his majesty's service, but after attending king Charles during the struggle, he accompanied king Charles II in his exile, until the Restoration.

BYBLIS (Myth.) a daughter of Miletus and Cyanea, or according to some, of Eidotes; who falling in love with her brother Caunus, is said to have killed herself in despair. Apollod. l. 3; Hygin. Fab. 243; Paus. l. 7; Ovid. de Art. Am. l. 1.

BYBLOS (Geog.) Βύβλος, a city of Phœnicia, between Sidon and Orthosia, now called Giblee, or Gibelletto, which was famous for the worship of Adonis. Lucian de Dea Syria.

BYFIELD, Nicholas (Biog.) a puritan, who studied at Oxford, and died, leaving several works much thought of by his party. His son Adoniram, one of the heroes of Butler's Hudibras, was active in the cause of rebellion.

BYNG, George (Hist.) lord viscount Torrington, a distinguished naval officer, was born in 1663, and died in 1732, first lord of the Admiralty; after rising by his merit through the several ranks in the naval service to that of rear-admiral, and being advanced to the dignity of the peerage. [Vide Plate XV]

Byng, John, third son of the preceding, accompanied his father in all his expeditions, in which he shared the glory, and was raised to the rank of an admiral. But his attempts to relieve Fort St. Philip, in Minorca, when blockaded by the French, proved abortive, and his hesitation in engaging the enemy, when a bold attack might perhaps have gained the victory, roused the clamours of the nation against him. Being tried and condemned by a court-martial, he was shot at Portsmouth in 1757, when he met death with calm composure. [Vide Plate XV]

Byng (Her.) the name of an ancient family in Kent, which at present enjoys a peerage, conferred on admiral George Byng, before-mentioned, who was created a baronet in 1715, and a peer in 1721, by the title of baron Byng, of Southill, co. Bedford, and viscount Torrington, co. Devon, 1721. [Vide Torrington] This was a family of distinction, as early as the reign of Henry VII.

BYRNE, William (Biog.) a landscape engraver, was born in 1742, and died in 1805. His principal works are the 'Antiquities of Great Britain,' after Hearne; a set of 'Views of the Lakes,' after Farrington, and Smith's Scenery of Italy.

BYROM, John (Biog.) an English poet, was born in 1691, and died in 1763, leaving several pieces of poetry, which were thought to entitle him to a place among the British poets, in the edition of 1810, 21 vols. 8vo.

BYRON, John de (Hist.) of the ancient and honourable family mentioned under Heraldry, served under Edward I in the wars against the Scots, and also on other occasions. He was governor of the Castle of Dover, and governor custos of the city of York.

BYRON, Sir John, Knight, joined Henry earl of Richmond, whom he served at the battle of Bosworth Field. He was much in his favour when he ascended the throne as Henry VII.

BYRON, Sir Nicholas, distinguished himself in the wars of the Low Countries, and still more so in the rebellion at the battle of Edgehill, and on other occasions, where he served the royal cause by his valour and conduct.

BYRON, John, the first lord Byron, and nephew of the preceding, was lieutenant of the tower, and a gentleman of tried fidelity to king Charles I, who signalised himself in the field on every occasion, but particularly in the victory of Roundway Down, which was chiefly gained by his bravery and good conduct; and afterwards in the siege of Chester, which he obstinately defended to the last extremity, and surrendered only on honourable terms. He died at Paris in 1632. Six of his brothers were also embarked in the same honourable cause.

BYRON, Sir Richard, the second lord Byron, and second brother of the preceding, was one of the valiant colonels at the battle of Edgehill, and afterwards performed many brilliant exploits as governor of Newark. He died full of honour in 1679, in the 74th year of his age.

BYRON, Sir Robert, fifth brother of the first lord Byron, was a colonel of foot in the service of Charles I.

BYRON, Sir Philip, the seventh brother, was, after many signal services in Yorkshire, killed at the head of his regiment, in that general storm made by the rebels on York, in 1644.

BYRON, Sir Thomas, the eighth brother, commanded the Prince of Wales' regiment, under the earl of Northampton, at the battle of Hopton-heath, near Stafford, in 1642, when the earl was killed, and he was so wounded that he could not keep the field.

BYRON, John, better known by the name of Commodore Byron, son of William, the fourth lord Byron, was the last survivor of the Wager man-of-war, captain Cheap, one of lord Anson's squadron shipwrecked on an uninhabited island in the South Seas, from which not above 10 out of 160, lived to return to England. He afterwards distinguished himself in the naval service, and died an admiral in 1786.

BYRON (Her.) the name of a family which has obtained the most honourable rank in history, and is not less distinguished for its heraldic honours, being one of the first in point of antiquity and consequence, from the earliest period in which it is mentioned. Ernies de Buron is mentioned in Doomsday as possessor of very many lands in Yorkshire and Lincolnshire. His descendant John, the first lord Byron, was in 1642, for his fidelity and loyalty, advanced to the dignity of a baron. His descendant, the poet, and grandson of admiral Byron, was the sixth lord Byron. The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Byron, lord Byron, of Rochdale, co. Lancaster.

Arms. Argent, three bendlets enhanced gules.

Crest. On a wreath, a mermaid with her comb and mirror, all proper.

Supporters. Two-horses chesnut.

Motto. "Crede Byron."

BYRSA (Geog.) a citadel in Carthage, said to have been built by Dido. It was burnt by the wife of Asdrubal, when the city was taken. Liv. l. 34, c. 62; Virg. Æn. l. 1; Strab. l. 17; Justin. l. 18; Flor. l. 2.

BYTHNER, Victorinus (Biog.) a linguist, and native of Poland, studied at Oxford at the time of the rebellion, wrote, 1. 'Lethargy of the Soul,' &c. 8vo. 1636. 2. 'Tabula Directoria,' &c. Oxon. 1637. 3. 'Lingua Pruditorum,' 8vo. Oxon. 1638, and afterwards reprinted. 4. 'Manipulus Messis Magnæ,' &c. 8vo. Lond. 1639. 5. 'Clavis Lingue Sanctæ,' 8vo. Cantab. 1648. 6. 'Lyra Prophetica Davidis Regis,' &c. 4to. Lond. 1650.

BYZANTIUM (Geog.) a town situated on the Thracian Bosphorus, founded by a colony of Megara, under the conduct of Byzas 658 years before the Christian era. It became very considerable in the time of the Roman emperors, but it was taken and destroyed by Severus, after a three years siege, which it withstood in behalf of Niger. It was afterwards rebuilt by the same emperor, but suffered again severely in the reign of Gallienus, and also in that of Claudius the Goth, and during the contest between Constantine and Licinius; it was besieged by the former in consequence of Licinius having sought refuge there, and being taken, the emperor afterwards enlarged and beautified it, giving it the name of Constantinopolis, after his own name, whence the modern name of Constantinople is derived. [Vide Constantinople] From this town the writers of the Roman history, until the downfall of the Roman emperor, have received the name of Byzantine Historians, of whose works a collection was made at Paris, in 36 vols. fol. Paris, 1648, and another in 28 vols. Venice, 1729. Diod. l. 1; Strab. l. 1; Patercul. l. 2; C. Nep. in Paus.; Mel. l. 2; Plin. l. 4; Justin. l. 9, c. 1; Euseb. in Chron.; Marcell. l. 22.

BZOVIUS, Abraham (Biog.) an historian and Dominican of Poland, was born in 1567, and died in 1637. He is principally known as the continuator of Baronius' Annals of the Church, of which nine volumes folio have been printed, the first eight at Cologne, 1616-1641, and the ninth at Rome, in 1672. He likewise wrote the Lives of some of the Popes, Sermons, &c.

C.

CAAB (Biog.) or Cab Ben-Zohair, an Arabian poet, who first exercised his pen against the impostor Mahomet, but on the conquest of his country he turned Mahometan, and by changing the name of Mahomet into that of Abubeker, he converted a satirical poem into a panegyric.

CAANTHUS (Myth.) a son of Oceanus and Tethys, having burnt the temple of Apollo, in revenge for his carrying away his sister Malia, he was killed for his impiety by the god, and a monument raised to his memory. Paus. l. 9, c. 10.

CABADES (Hist.) a king of Persia, who was expelled from his kingdom and put in prison, but being liberated by the fidelity of his wife, he reascended the throne. He made war on the emperor Anastasius, and also on Justinian, but was frequently conquered by Belisarius, and died after a reign of 41 years, in 532. Procop. de Bell. Persic.; Agath. Hist. l. 4; Niceph. Hist. Miscell. l. 16, c. 15.

CABALA (Geog.) a place in Sicily, where Dionysius gained a victory over the Carthaginians.

CABALLINUM (Geog.) now Chalons sur Saone, a town of the Ædui, in Gallia Lugdunensis. Cæs. de Bell. Gall. l. 7, c. 42.

CABALLINUS (Geog.) a very clear fountain of mount Helicon, called by the Greeks Hippocrene. Pers. Prot. v. 1.

CABALLO, Emanuel (Hist.) an illustrious Genevan, who at the time that the French besieged the city of Geneva in 1518, and had reduced it to the last extremity, boldly ventured out of the port with some of his companions, and amidst the fire of the enemy, rescued a vessel full of provisions which had been dispatched for their relief, and by this brilliant action saved the city.

CABALLO, Bonaventura (Ecc.) bishop of Caserta, died in 1689, after having distinguished himself by all the graces of a Christian bishop.

CABANE, Raimond (Hist.) a young Sarasin, who turning Christian, rose to the dignity of Senechal, at the court of Charles II. king of Naples.

CABANE, Robert de, son of the preceding, was also grand senechal, and through the intrigues of his mother, became high in favour with the queen Joan, but being afterwards suspected of the murder of Andrew, the husband of Joan, he was put to death, after enduring the torture, with his mother and his son, notwithstanding all the endeavours of the queen to save him.

CABARNOS (Myth.) a deity worshipped at Paros, whose priests were called Cabarni, which name Hesychius also applies to the priests of Ceres. Hesychius; Suidas; Steph. Byzant.

CABASILAS, Nilus (Ecc.) archbishop of Thessalonica in the 14th century, under the empire of the Andronici. He wrote two treatises against the Latins, the latter of which was translated by Thomas Gressop, student in Oxford, under the title of 'A Treatise containing a Declaration of the Pope's usurped Primacy,' &c. 8vo. 1560. They were published in Greek and Latin, Bas. 1544, Francof. 1555, and with Salmastius' notes, 1608.

CABASILAS, Nicholas, nephew of the preceding, who succeeded his uncle in the see of Thessalonica, under John Cantacuzenus, wrote among other things, on the Procession of the Holy Ghost against the Latins, which was printed in Latin, Venet. 1545, Antv. 1560, and in Greek and Latin, in the 'Bibliotheca Patrum.'

CABASSOLE, Philip de (Ecc.) bishop of Cavaillon, in Provence, of which he was a native, was in 1341, honoured with the rank of chancellor to Sancha, queen of Sicily, by her husband Robert, and jointly with that princess, was regent during the minority of Joan, her grand-daughter. He was created a cardinal by Urban V, and died in 1372. He wrote a treatise 'De Nugis Curialium.'

CABASSUS, John (Biog.) a priest of the Oratory of Aix, died in 1685, at the age of 81. His chief works are 1. 'Juris Canonici Theoria et Praxis,' a new edition, fol. 1708. 2. 'Historiarum Conciliorum et Canonum, &c. Notitia Ecclesiastica,' fol. 1685, an enlarged edition of the 8vo. 1670.

CABEL (Biog.) or Kabel Adrian Vander, a landscape painter of Ryswick, was born in 1631, and died in 1695. His manner is much after the Italian school, which he studied much.

CABELLIO (Geog.) or Caballio, a town of Gallia Narbonensis, now Cavaillon, on the Durance, in Provence.

CABELLIONUM (Geog.) the Latin name of Chalons sur Saone.

CABESTAN (Biog.) or Cabestaign, William de, a gentleman of Provençal, and a poet in the service of Tricline, wife of Raymond de Scillans, who, gaining the good graces of his mistress, was murdered by the husband out of jealousy. Raymond afterwards caused his heart to be served up for the table of his wife, who being informed of what she had unconsciously eaten, died of grief in 1213.

CABILLEAU, Baldwin (Biog.) a Jesuit, and a Latin poet of Ypres, in Flanders, died in 1652, at the age of 80, leaving 'Epigrammata,' Antv. 12mo. 1621, 16mo. 1634, &c.; besides some Sacred Dramas, &c.

CABIRI (Myth.) Καβειροι, certain deities, said to be the sons of Vulcan, who were worshipped particularly in Samothrace, whose temple was violated by Cambyzes. Herod. l. 2; Cic. de Nat. Deor. l. 1; Strab. l. 10; Paus. l. 9; Nonn. in Dionys. c. 27; Lactant. de Fal. Relig. l. 1; Schol. in Apollon. Argon. l. 1.

CABIRI (Numis.) these deities are represented on medals, as in the annexed figure of a man with a hammer in his right hand, and in his left an anvil, or something resembling; inscription on the obverse, ΚΑΒΕΙΡΟC; and on the reverse, ΘΕCΚΑΑΟΙΚΗ. A medal of Claudius Gothicus is inscribed DEO CABIRO. Vaillant. Præst.; Haym. Thesaur.

CABOT, Sebastian (Hist.) a navigator of Venetian parentage, who was born at Bristol in 1467, and died at the age of 70 or 80. He went on a voyage with his father to discover a north-west passage to India; and in subsequent voyages, he formed a settlement on the coast of Newfoundland, and by penetrating to the northern parts of Russia, he laid the foundation of that mercantile connexion which England formed with that country. He is supposed to have first observed the variation of the needle.

CABRAL (Hist.) or Cabrera, Pedro Alvares, a Portuguese navigator, the son of Ferdinand Cabral, a nobleman, was sent out in 1500, with a fleet by Emanuel, king of Portugal, on a voyage to the Indies, but was driven by a storm on the coast of Brazil, where he formed the settlement to which he gave the name of Santa Cruz. He afterwards reached the place of his destination, and formed a settlement on the coast of Calicut, where he reduced the Zamorin, or emperor, to obedience. He returned to Europe in 1501, loaded with curiosities.

CABRERA, Bernard de (Hist.) minister of state to Peter IV, king of Arragon, who, stimulated by the false insinuations of his courtiers, condemned him to lose his head, in 1364, of which he heartily repented after his death.

CABRERA, Bernard, the favourite of Martin, king of Sicily, aspired to the throne of the latter at his death; but being defeated and taken prisoner, Ferdinand granted him his life, on condition that he left the island never more to return. He died soon after in exile.

CACA (Myth.) a goddess among the Romans, who is said to have discovered to Hercules where her brother concealed his oxen. Lactant. de Falsa Relig. l. 1, c. 10; Gyrard. Hist. Deor. l. 1.

CACUS (Myth.) a famous robber, the son of Vulcan and Medusa, who having stolen the oxen of Hercules, dragged them backwards to escape detection. But the hero was led by the lowing of his cattle to the spot, where he attacked Cacus and killed him.

Virg. Æn. l. 8, v. 198.

CADALOUS (Ecc.) or Cadolus, bishop of Parma, was elected pope in 1061, by a faction of the emperor Henry IV, in opposition to Alexander II, and made two several attempts to get possession of the city of Rome, but being repulsed both times, he escaped with difficulty from the castle of St. Angelo, where he was besieged. The difference between these two rival candidates was terminated in a council in 1064, in favour of Alexander; but Cadolus, who took the name of Honorius II, did not renounce his claim to the papal chair until the day of his death, which happened soon after. Baron. Annal. Ann. 1061, &c.; Platin. in Alexand. II.

CADAMOSTO (Hist.) or Cadamusti, Lewis, a Venetian navigator, was born in 1422, and died in 1464, after having been in the service of Henry, king of Portugal, for whom he made voyages to Madeira, the Canaries, and to the coast of Africa, as far as the Gambia, &c.

CADÉ, Jack (Hist.) a native of Ireland, from which he had been obliged to fly into France to escape the penalty of his crimes, took advantages of the commotions in England in the reign of Henry VI; and, having headed the Kentish men, and gained admittance into London, he caused much mischief for a time; but at length his followers were drawn from him on the promise of an amnesty, when he was taken and slain in the Woods of Kent, where he had sought to conceal himself.

CADER, Billah (Hist.) vide Al Kader.

CADIZ (Geog.) a town of Andalusia, in Spain, situated at the northern extremity of a peninsula, 53 miles S.S.W. Seville, and 60 W.N.W. Gibraltar. Lon. 6° 16' W. lat. 36° 32' N.

History of Cadiz.

Cadiz, which was known to the ancients by the name of Gades, was taken and pillaged by the English under lord Essex in 1596; but another attempt, which they made upon it in 1626, was not successful; and a third attempt by the duke of Ormond failed likewise. It was bombarded by the English in 1800; and it was from its bay that Villeneuve sailed to fight the battle of Trafalgar. Cadiz is the see of a bishop suffragan of Seville.

CADMUS (Hist.) a king of Thebes, and an Egyptian by birth, was, according to the poets, the son of Agenor, king of Phœnicia, who, being sent by his father in search of his sister, whom Jupiter had carried away, was led by the oracle into Boœtia, where he is said to have built the city of Thebes, or at least the citadel called after him Cadmea, A. M. 2545, A. C. 1490. To him is attributed the introduction of the alphabet into Greece. Herod. l. 1, &c.; Hesiod. Theog. v. 937, &c.; Diodor. l. 1; Ovid. Met. l. 3; Hygin. Fab. 6, &c.; Paus. l. 9; Pherecyd. Hist. l. 4; Schol. Eurip. in Phœniss.; Schol. in Apollod. l. 3, &c.

CADMUS (Biog.) surnamed the Elder, a son of Pandion, of Miletus, celebrated as an historian in the age of Croesus. Dionys. Hal. l. 21; Diod. l. 1; Strab. l. 1.

CADMUS, another historian, who wrote a history of Attica, according to Strabo.

CADOGAN, William (Hist.) of the honourable family mentioned under Heraldry, distinguished himself in Ireland under the earl of Strafford, particularly against the traitors O'Neill and O'Rowe, and died governor of the borough and castle of Trim in 1661.

CADOGAN, Earl of, grandson of the preceding, rose by his merits to the rank of general in the campaigns of Flanders, where he served under the duke of Marlborough, and signal-ised himself at the battles of Hockstet, Ramilies, and Taniers. He afterwards acted both as a negotiator and a statesman; and, succeeding the duke of Marlborough at his death in 1722 in the post of commander-in-chief of his majesty's forces, he died in 1729.

CADOGAN (Her.) the name of a family of great honour and antiquity in Wales, which, according to the accounts of genealogists and historians, is descended from Keadlyn, prince of Powis and Reinger, daughter and heir to Tydyl Trevor, prince of Ferley, whose grandson, Kydwgan, lord of Radnor, with his three sons, defended his territories against Henry I. From him descended William Cadogan before-mentioned, who, for his merits, was in 1706 created a peer of this realm by the title of lord Cadogan, baron of Reading; and in 1718 baron of Oakley, viscount Caversham, and earl of Cadogan, with remainder of the barony of Oakley to Charles, his brother. He dying without male issue, the titles of viscount and earl became extinct. But Charles Sloan Cadogan, his nephew, the third baron, was created in 1800 viscount Chelsea and earl Cadogan. The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Cadogan, viscount Chelsea, and baron Cadogan.

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth gules, a lion rampant regardant or, second and third argent, three boars' heads coupé vert.

Crest. Out of a ducal coronet or, a gryphon's head vert.

Supporters. On the dexter-side, a lion regardant or; on the sinister, a gryphon regardant vert, each gorged with a double tressure flowered and counter-flowered gules.

Motto. "Qui invidet, mihi est."

CADOGAN, William (Biog.) a physician, who was educated at Oxford, and died in 1797 in the 86th year of his age; wrote, 1. 'A small Treatise on the Management of Children,' 1750. 2. 'Dissertations on the Gout,' &c. 8vo. 1764.

CADOMUM (Geog.) the Latin name for Caen, a town of France.

CADURCI (Geog.) a people of Gallia Aquitania, situated between the Garumna and the Liger, who occupied the district now called Querci. They were famous for making linen, particularly for bed coverings.

C. 251, when he led in triumph 18 generals, and 120 elephants. Val. Max. l. 1; Senec. in Controv. 4; Plin. l. 7; Appian. in Mith.

CÆCILIUS METELLUS, Q., son of the preceding, was consul with L. Veturius Philo, U. C. 547.

CÆCILIUS METELLUS, Q., son of the preceding, and grandson of L. Cæcilius Metellus, the high priest above-mentioned, was surnamed Macedonicus, from the advantages which he gained in Crete and Macedonia as proconsul. He had four sons, who all rose to the consular dignity; namely, Q. Cæcilius, surnamed Baleareicus, from his conquest of the Balearics; L. Cæcilius, surnamed Diadematus, supposed to be the same as the Cæcilius, surnamed Dalmaticus, mentioned hereafter; Caius Cæcilius, surnamed Caprarius, a consul with Carbo, U. C. 641; M. Cæcilius, the fourth brother, a consul and colleague of M. Scaurus, U. C. 639. Cic. pro Muræni. c. 14; Vell. Pater. l. 2; Val. Max. l. 2; Plin. l. 7, c. 13.

CAEN (Geog.) a large town of Lower Normandy, in France, in the modern department of Calvados, situated at the influx of the small river Odon into the larger stream of the Orne, 62 miles W. by S. Rouen, 132 W. by N. Paris. Lon. 0° 21' W. lat. 49° 11' N.

History of Caen.

Caen, called by Latin writers Cadomum, is a town of considerable antiquity, though not so ancient as some authors have imagined. It was a place of some note in the time of William the Conqueror, who chose it for his favourite residence, and lies buried in the Abbaye aux Hommes. Edward III, of England, met with considerable resistance here as he was on his way to the battle of Crecy in 1346; but he succeeded at length in making himself master of the place. It fell afterwards again into the hands of the English in 1417, and continued in their possession until 1448, when it was finally subjugated to the power of France by Charles VII. Admiral Coligni took it in 1562 for the Huguenots, and the Prussians occupied it for a short time in 1815. Caen has long been noted for its university, which was first founded by Henry IV, of England, in 1431.

CÆMARO (Biog.) a Greek, who wrote an account of India. Plut. de Flum.

CÆNEUS (Myth.) one of the Argonauts.

CÆNIS (Myth.) a woman of Thessaly, who being beloved by the god Neptune was changed into a man, and rendered invulnerable. She also changed her name, and was called Cæneus. Virg. Æn. l. 6; Ovid. Met. l. 12; Paus. l. 5.

CÆPARIUS (Hist.) an accomplice in the conspiracy of Cataline. Cic. in Cat. 3.

CÆPIO, Q. Servilius (Hist.) a Roman consul in the Cimbrian war, U. C. 648, who, having plundered the temple at Tolosa, now Toulouse, is said to have been punished by divine vengeance. Pater. l. 2; Justin. l. 32.

CÆRE (Geog.) or Cæres, anciently Agylla, now Cerveteri, a city of Etruria, once the capital of the whole country. This town having received the Romans who fled from the Gauls with the fire of Vesta, they were made citizens of Rome without the privilege of voting. Whence Cæsites tabellæ was applied to those who had no suffrage, and Cæsites cæra became a term of reproach.

Horat. l. 1, ep. 6.

CAERLEON (Geog.) a town of Monmouth, in England, situated on the river Usk, 128 m. W. London, 26 Bristol. Lon. 3° 21' W., lat. 51° 36' N. It occupies the site of the ancient Isca Silurum, the chief Roman station among the Silures, and in the middle ages it was the metropolitan see of Wales, which in 521 is said to have been transferred to St. David's.

CAERNARVON, Robert, first Earl of (Hist.) one of the most distinguished and valiant loyalists, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, who, during the rebellion, was killed at the first battle of Newbury in 1642; after he had charged and routed a body of the rebels' horse, and returning carelessly back through some of their scattered troopers, was by one of them that knew him run through the body with a sword, of which he died in an hour.

CAERNARVON, Earl of (Her.) the title conferred on Robert, lord Dormer above-mentioned, which became extinct at the death of the second earl, in 1678. This title was revived in the family of Herbert. [vide Herbert] The title, arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Titles. Herbert, earl of Caernarvon, Baron Porchester of High Clere, co. Somersetshire.

Arms. Per pale azure and gules, three lions rampant argent, a crescent for difference.

Crest. On a wreath a wyvern with wings elevated vert, holding in his mouth a sinister hand couped at the wrist gules, charged on the breast with a crescent for difference.

Supporters. On the dexter side a panther gardant argent, spotted gules and azure, and fire issuing out of his mouth and ears proper; on the sinister side a lion argent, each dually gorged per pale azure and gules, and charged on the shoulder with one spot of ermine.

Motto. "Ung je servirai."

CÆSALPINUS, Andrem (Biog.) a botanist and physician of Arezzo, was born in 1519, and died in 1603. He published 'Libri XVI de Plantis X,' 4to. Florent. 1583, to which was published an Appendix, 4to. Rom. 1603; besides some medical works, which were esteemed in his day.

CÆSAR (Hist.) the surname given to the Julian family, most probably from the circumstance of the first of this name having been taken out of his mother's womb by the Cæsarean operation; but various conjectures have been formed respecting the origin of the name. After it became dignified in the person of Julius Cæsar and his successors, it was employed as a title for the heir apparent of the empire, in the age of the emperors. The twelve first Roman emperors were distinguished by the surname of Cæsar; namely, Julius Cæsar, to whom it properly belonged, and his immediate successors, Augustus, Tiberius, Caligula, Claudius, Nero, Galba, Otho, Vitellius, Vespasian, Titus, and Domitian; but the Julian family became extinct at the death of Nero, after which the surname became a title of dignity.

CÆSAR, Lucius, father to the dictator, died suddenly when putting on his shoes.

CÆSAR, C. Julius, the first emperor of Rome, was the son of L. Cæsar and Aurelia, the daughter of Cotta, and was said to be descended from Iulus the son of Æneas. He availed himself of the troubles of the times to assume the imperial power, after having defeated his rival Pompey, and crushed his party; but he had not enjoyed it long before he fell by the murderous hands of the democratic faction, of which Brutus was the head. He died pierced with 23 wounds, on the 15th of March, A. C. 44, in the 56th year of his age, lamented for his talents and his virtues. [vide Plate I] His Commentaries give him a claim to a high rank in the republic of letters; the best editions of which are that by Dr. Clarke, fol. Lond. 1712; that of Cambridge, with a Greek translation, 4to. 1727; that of Oudendorp, 2 vols. 4to. Lugd. Bat. 1737; that of Elzevir, 8vo. Lugd. Bat. 1635, and that in Usum Delphini, 4to. Paris. 1678.

CÆSAR, C. Lucius, brother of Caius Cæsar, the poet and orator commended by Cicero, was consul and prætor. They both followed the party of Sylla, and were put to death by order of Marius.

CÆSAR, Octavianus, vide Augustus.

CÆSAR, Lucius, an uncle of M. Anthony, who, following the interest of Pompey, was proscribed by Augustus, for which Anthony proscribed Cicero, the friend of Augustus.

CÆSAR, the name given to Caius and Lucius, the sons of Agrippa.

CÆSAR, duke of Vendome, and natural son of Henry IV, of France, distinguished himself as a statesman and a warrior, and died in 1665, at the age of 71.

CÆSAR, vide Borgia.

CÆSAR, Sir Julius, a descendant from Adelmarr, count of Genoa, was born at Tottenham, in Middlesex, in 1557, educated at Oxford, and after passing through many honourable employments, particularly that of chancellor of the exchequer to king James I, he died in 1636.

CÆSAR, Sir Thomas, brother of the preceding, was one of the barons of the exchequer.

CÆSAR, Henry, another brother of sir Julius, who died dean of Ely in 1636, aged 72; is entitled to notice as the founder of two scholarships, and two fellowships, in Jesus College, Cambridge, besides other noble benefactions.

CÆSAR (Numis.) vide Julia, gens.

CÆSAR, C. Julius (Biog.) the son of Lucius Cæsar, is distinguished by Cicero for his wit. Cic. Offic. l. 1.

CÆSAR, Augusta (Geog.) a town of Hispania Tarraconensis, now Saragossa, [vide Saragossa] so called from its founder, Augustus Cæsar, by whom it was built on the bank of the river Iberus, on the site of the ancient city Subduba. It was the birth-place of the poet Prudentius. Strab. l. 3; Mel. l. 2; Plin. l. 3; Ptol. l. 2.

CÆSAREA (Bibl.) Καϊσάρεια, formerly called Stratonis Turris, was built by Herod the Great, and so called in honour of Augustus. It was situated on the eastern coast of the Mediterranean, and is frequently mentioned in the New Testament. Here king Agrippa was smitten for neglecting to give God the glory when the people loaded him with flattery. Here Cornelius, the centurion, was baptized, as also Philip, the deacon, with four daughters; and here Agabus, the prophet, foretold to Paul that he would be bound at Jerusalem. Acts viii. x. &c.

CÆSAREA, Philippi (Geog.) a town of Palestine, at the foot of mount Paneus, near the springs of Jordan; a day's journey from Sidon, and a day and a half from Damascus, supposed to be the present Bohbec. It was enlarged and embellished by Philip, the tetrarch, who named it Cæsaria, in honour of the emperor Tiberius. The woman who was healed by our Saviour, of an issue, is said to have been of Cæsarea Philippi.

CÆSAREA, the capital of Mauritania Cæsariensis, which was a place of some note in the time of the Roman emperors, was originally called Jol, but afterwards Cæsarea, by Julia, in honour of Augustus. Strab. l. 17; Plin. l. 5; Dio. 60.

CÆSAREA, the name of several other places, so called in honour of the Roman emperors.

CÆSAREA (Numis.) many of the cities of this name are distinguished either by their types, their inscription, or their

CÆSAREA, a town of Cappadocia, is known by the figure of the mountain Argæus, as in the annexed figure; inscription, ΕΥΕΒΕΙΑΣ... ΑΡΕΙΑΣ for ΚΑΙΣΑΡΕΙΑΣ; it is also known by the inscription, ΚΑΙΣΑΡΕΩΝ ΠΡΟΣ ΤΩ ΑΡΤΑΙΩ, on some medals.

This town struck medals of Tiberius, Claudius, Nero, Otho, Vespasian, Titus, Domitian, Trajan, Antoninus Pius, M. Aurelius, L. Verus, Commodus, Pescennius, Sept. Severus, Julia Domna, Caracalla, Plautilla, Geta, Macrinus, Heliogabalus, Julia Paula, Julia Mæsa, Alexander Severus, Julia Mamaea, Gordianus Pius, Tranquillina, and Trebonianus Gallus. Antoninus first conferred upon it the dignity of a metropolis, as ΚΑΙΣΑΡΕΙΑΚ ΜΗΤΡΟΠ. ET. B. Cæsarea Metropolis, anno 2. The year of Antoninus' reign is here marked, as on the medals of other emperors. It enjoyed the dignity of the Neocoria twice, as ΜΗΤΡΟ. ΚΑΙΣΑ. ΒΙΣ ΝΕΩΚΟΡΟΙ ΕΤΟΥΣ Δ; to this was sometimes added ΕΝΤΙΧ, i. e. εντειχιν, probe munitis munita; sometimes κοινος ΦΙΛΑΔΕΛΦΙΟC, i. e. commune certamen fraterni amoris.

CÆSAREA, Philippi, is called on medals Cæsarea Augusta, as ΚΑΙΣΑΡΕΙΑ ΚΕΒΑΚΤΑ ΝΕΩΚΟΡΟ; or, to denote its situation, Cæsaria ad Panium, to which is added, sacra et inviolabilis, as ΚΑΙC. ΚΕΒ. ΙΕΡ. ΚΑΙ. ΑCΥ. ΥΠ. ΠΑΝΕΙΩ, on a medal of Aurelius; others are inscribed with its geographical name, COL. CAESAREA PHILIPPI. This town struck medals of Augustus, Caligula, Antoninus Pius, M. Aurelius, Lucilla, Commodus, Sept. Severus, Julia Domna, Caracalla, and Geta.

CÆSAREA, in Palestine, is well known by the inscription COL. PR. F. AUG. F. CAES. METR. P. S. P.; i. e. Colonia prima Flavia Augusta Felix Cæsarea Metropolis Provinciae Syriae Palestinae. It was called Colonia Flavia from the emperor Vespasian, by whom it was raised, prima, on account of its prerogatives above the rest, to which was sometimes added LIB. for libera, because it enjoyed its own laws. It was raised to the dignity of a metropolis by Alexander Severus. It struck medals of Augustus, Lucius Cæsar, Claudius, Britannicus, Nero, Domitian, Trajan, Adrian, Antoninus Pius, Aurelius, Faustina, jun., L. Verus, Commodus, Pescennius, Caracalla, Macrinus, Diadumenianus, Heliogabalus, Alexander Severus, Philippus, sen., Herennia Etruscilla, Herennius Etruscus, Hostilianus, on which a very frequent type is a figure of Astarta. This town dated its epocha from U. C. 751.

CÆSAREA Germanica, a town of Commagene, is known by the inscription ΚΑΙC. ΑΡΕΙΑC ΓΕΡΜΑΝΙΚΗC, bearing the effigy of Æsculapius; to this is sometimes added KOM. for Commagene. This town struck medals of M. Aurelius, L. Verus, Commodus, Pescennius Niger, Septimius Severus, Macrinus, Heliogabalus, Julia Mamaea, Philippus, sen. &c. on which a frequent type is the figure of a female sitting on a rock, to which are added the years of the reign when they were struck.

CÆSAREA, a town of Cilicia, was distinguished on medals by the addition ad Anazarbum, to denote its situation near a mountain of that name, as ΚΑΙCΑΡ. ΥΠ. ΑΝΑΖΑΡ. A frequent type on the medals of this town, was the figure of a woman sitting and dropping a pebble into an urn. The epocha marked on its medals was dated from U. C. 734.

CÆSAREA Libani, or ad Libanum, is known only by the inscriptions ΚΑΙCΑΡΙΑΚ ΑΙΒΑΝΟΥ.

CÆSAREA, a town of Mauritania, is distinguished by the inscription COL. JUL. CAESAREA JUBAE REGIA. Goltz. Thes.; Vail. Col. et Num. Gr.; Trist. Comment. Hist.; Spanh. Dissert. vol. I.; Patin. Imp. Morell. Thes. Imp. &c.

CÆSARINI, Julian (Ecc.) a cardinal of a noble family at Rome, was elevated to that dignity by Martin V in 1426; and, after being employed by that pope, as also by Eugene IV, on the most important missions, was killed in the battle of Vannes, which was fought with the Turks in 1444 by Ladislaus, king of Poland. Spondan. Annal.

CÆSARINI, Alexander, was created a cardinal by Leo X in 1517; and, after being employed by Adrian VI, Clement VII, and Paul III, he died in 1542.

CÆSARION (Hist.) the son of J. Cæsar by queen Cleopatra, was, at the age of 13, proclaimed by Anthony and his mother king of Cyprus, Egypt, and Cælosyria, but was put to death by Augustus. Suet. in Aug. 17.

CAIRO, Francisco (Biog.) a painter of Milan in the 16th century, studied at Rome, and at Venice, and acquired considerable reputation by his pictures on religious subjects.

CAIRO (Geog.) or Grand Cairo, called in the Turkish Al Ca-

harek, the metropolis of modern Egypt, which consists of three towns about a mile apart; namely, Old Cairo, New Cairo, and the port Bulae. It stands on the banks of the Nile, 100 miles S. of its mouth. Lon. 31° 18' E, lat. 30° N.

History of Cairo.

Cairo was built near the ancient capital called Meer, or Fostath, in the year of the Hegira 358, A. D. 968, by Giavahr, a general of Moss Lednash, the first caliph of the Fatemite race. It was enlarged and surrounded with walls by the sultan Saladin. The caliph Hassan Beamrillah set fire to it in the year of the Hegira 410, A. D. 1020, by which a quarter of it was consumed; but its population is said to have been so great in 1348 that 20,000 people perished daily by the plague. It was taken in 1517 by Selim from the Mamelukes, since which time it has been under the dominion of the Turks, except during the period that it was occupied by the French in the late war.

CAITHNESS and ORKNEY, Harald, Earl of (Hist.) a potent nobleman, who rebelled several times against William the Lion, in consequence of which his son Torpin, who had been given in hostage, had his eyes put out, was emasculated and suffered to perish in prison. His father died in 1206.

CAITHNESS, Alan Stewart, Earl of, was killed fighting against the rebels in 1431.

CAITHNESS, William Sinclair, Earl of, son of the first earl of Caithness, was killed with his royal master James III at the battle of Flodden in 1513.

CAITHNESS, John Sinclair, Earl of, son of the preceding, was killed in an encounter with the Orcadians in 1527, when he invaded Orkney in order to assert his right to that island.

CAITHNESS, Earl of (Her.) a very old Scotch title, which occurs as early as 875 in Torfaeus' History of the Orcades, where Dungaldus, earl of Caithness, is spoken of. It became extinct at the death of John, the last earl of the first race; but was revived in the person of David Stewart, son of Robert II, and reverted to the crown again in 1437, on the attainder of Walter, earl of Athol, for the murder of king James I. This title afterwards came into the family of the Crichtons for a short time; but, reverting a third time to the crown, it was conferred in 1455 on William Sinclair, lord high chancellor of Scotland, from whom the present branch of that family that now enjoys it is remotely descended. The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow: Titles. Sinclair, earl of Caithness, lord Berriedale, and baronet.

Arms. Quarterly, 1st, azure, a ship at anchor, her oars erected in saltire, within a double treasure counter-flowered or, for the title of Orkney; 2d and 3d or, a lion rampant gules; 4th, azure, a ship or, for the title of Caithness; over all a cross engrailed dividing the four quarters sable, for Sinclair.

Crest. A cock proper.

Supporters. Two griffins proper, beaked and membered or. Motto. "Commit thy work to God."

CAIUS (Hist.) a prænomen very common among the Romans of the males, as Caia was for the females, the former of which was denoted by the abbreviation C, and the latter by that inverted thus Q, whence it formed a part of the marriage ceremony for the bride, on entering her house, to say to her husband "Ubi tu Caius, ego Caia," as much as to signify, where you are master I am mistress, which is supposed to have had its origin with Tanaquil, the wife of Tarquin, whose name was Caia Cæcilia. Plin. l. 8; Quintil. l. 1.

CAIUS, the son of Agrippa and Julia, and grandson of Augustus, was nominated consul elect U. C. 748, sent with proconsular power against the Arabians, Armenians, and Parthians; and, after conducting the war with much credit to himself, he died U. C. 756 of a wound which he treacherously received from the hands of a rebel, whom he was besieging in one of the neighbouring cities.

CAIUS (Numis.) the above-mentioned prince of this name being adopted by his grandfather Augustus, U. C. 737, A. C. 16, was styled Cæsar on medals bearing his effigy, as on the annexed figure, C. CÆSAR AUGUSTI F. Being chosen and prince juvenutia, and nominated pontifex consularis designatus in 748, he is so styled on medals; as C. CÆSAR AUGUSTI F. PONT. COS. DES. PRIN. JUVENT. And, as his brother Lucius also enjoyed the same titles, they are frequently coupled on the same medal; the inscription C. L. CÆSARIS AUGUSTI F. COS. DESIG. PRINC. JUVENT. Sometimes their two heads are coupled with that of their father. [Vide Agrippa]

CAIUS, vide Caligula.

CAIUS, or Kaye, John, a physician of Norwich, was born in 1510, educated at Cambridge; and, after being discharged from his post as physician to Elizabeth on suspicion of his favouring the Catholics, he died in 1573. By the munificent donation of some estates to Gonvill-hall, the house in which he was educated, he erected it into a college called after him Caius College. Besides translating most of Galen's works, and some pieces from Hippocrates, he wrote, 1. 'De Ephemeris Britannica,' Lond. 1556, reprinted as lately as 1721. 2. 'Of some Rare Plants and Animals,' 1570. 3. 'De Canibus Britannicis,' Lond. 1570, and inserted entire in Pennant's 'British Zoology.' 4. 'De Pronuntiatione Græcæ et Latine Linguae,' Lond. 1574. He also wrote a History of the University of Cambridge, which he makes to be 1267 years older than that of Oxford. This was intended to be an answer to the claim of antiquity which had been set up by a writer of the same name in the following article.

CAIUS, or Kaye, Thomas, master of University College, Oxford, who died in 1572, was the author of a work entitled 'Assertio Antiquitatis Oxoniensis Academice,' 1568, 1574, which gave rise to the ridiculous claim of antiquity set up for Cambridge by the preceding writer; they were reprinted together by Hearne, in 2 vols. 8vo. 1730.

CALABER, Q. (Biog.) called also Smyrneus, a poet of the third century, wrote a Continuation of Homer's Iliad in Greek poetry; the best editions of which are that of Rhodoman, 12mo. Hanov. 1604, with the notes of Dausquicus; and that of Pauw. 8vo. Lugd. Bat. 1734.

CALABRIA (Geog.) a district of Magna Græcia, in Italy, which was celebrated by Horace for its abundance of bees and cattle.

guished themselves, during the revolutionary war, by their spirited resistance to their invaders; and their country was the theatre of an action between the French and English, in which the former were defeated.

CALAGURRIS (Geog.) a town of the Vascones, in Hispania Tarraconensis, on the Iberus, now Calahorra, which underwent a memorable siege, and submitted to the most dreadful famine rather than yield to Pompey. This was the birth-place of Quintilian. Liv. l. 39, c. 21; Val. Max. l. 7; Plin. l. 3.

CALAHORRA (Geog.) the ancient Calagurris, seated near the south bank of the Ebro, 62 miles N.W. Saragossa, 136 N. N. E. Madrid. Lon. 2° 6' W. lat. 42° N.

CALAIS and ZETHES (Myth.) vide Zethes.

CALAIS (Geog.) a sea-port town of Picardy, in France, situated in the modern department of the Pas de Calais, opposite Dover; the narrow channel between is called the Strait of Calais. It is 20 miles N. E. Boulogne, 25 S. W. Dunkirk, 55 N. Abbeville, 170 N. Paris, and 17½ S. E. Dover. Lon. 1° 51' E. lat. 50° 57' N.

History of Calais.

Calais, in the Latin Caletum, is supposed to have been the Iocus Portus of the ancients, which others however conjecture to be Boulogne. In the 12th century this town was no more than a village belonging to the counts of Boulogne; but it was afterwards so well fortified that Edward III reduced it only by famine in 1346. It continued in possession of the English till 1558, when it was taken by surprise by the duke of Guise; and, although by the treaty of Chateau Cambresis, it was to have been restored to queen Elizabeth, yet the surrender of it was refused on the plea of some prior aggression on the part of the English. In 1596 it was taken by the Spaniards by assault under the archduke Albert, but restored to the peace of Vervins in 1598. It was bombarded by the English under sir Cloudesley Shovel in 1694 and 1695, but without any effect. It was entirely free from the horrors of the revolution, to which other towns were witnesses; and, when Louis XVIII landed there after his long exile in 1814, the inhabitants erected a monument on the spot to commemorate the event.

CALAMIS (Biog.) a carver of antiquity, whose statue of Apollo, and some vases, are mentioned in high terms of commendation, although Cicero considers him inferior to Pausanias.

Propert. l. 3, el. 8.

*Gloria Lysippo est animosa effingere signa,

Cic. de Clar. c. 70; Plin. l. 34, c. 7; Quintil. l. 12.

CALAMUS (Myth.) a son of the river Meander, who was changed into a reed by Jupiter in consequence of his grief for the loss of Carpo, his mistress, who was drowned. Paus. l. 9; Serv. in Virg. Eclog. 5.

CALAMY, Edmund (Biog.), a nonconformist, who was born in 1600, educated at Cambridge, ejected in 1662, and died in 1666.

CALAMY, Edmund, grandson of the preceding, and also a nonconformist, was born in 1671, and died in 1732. He is principally known as the author of the 'Lives of the Nonconformists;' besides which he wrote some tracts in favour of nonconformity, and edited 'Baxter's History.'

CALANUS (Biog.) an Indian philosopher, who attended Alexander in his expedition, ascended the funeral pile which he had requested to be raised, and committed himself to the flames, according to the custom of his sect, in the 83d year of his age.

CALAS, John (Biog.) a merchant of Toulouse, was broke on the wheel in 1762 on a charge of having murdered his own son, although he has been supposed innocent of the crime, for which he suffered; from the hatred borne towards him on account of his religious profession as a Protestant.

CALASIO, Marius (Biog.) a Franciscan and professor of the Hebrew at Rome, published a Concordance of the Hebrew Words in the Bible, in 4 vols. fol. Rom. 1621, Lond. 1747.

CALAVIUS (Hist.) a magistrate of Capua, who rescued some Roman senators from death, &c. Liv. 1. 23, &c.

CALAUREA (Geog.) an island near Troezen, in the bay of Argos, famous as the place of refuge chosen by Demosthenes, who poisoned himself here to escape the persecutions of Antipater. Strab. 1. 8; Met. 1. 2; Ovid. Met. 1. 7; Plin. 1. 4; Paus. 1. 9.

CALCAGNINI, Celio (Biog.) a poet and orator of Ferrara, was born in 1479, and died in 1541. His works were published in 1 vol. fol. Basil. 1541 or 1544.

CALCAR (Biog.) or Kalkar, an historical painter of Calcar, a city of Cleves, was born in 1499, and died in 1546. He was the disciple of Titian, and so successful an imitator of his master that even connoisseurs were deceived.

CALCHAS (Myth.) a celebrated soothsayer, who accompanied the Greeks to Troy; and, having received the power of divination from Apollo, predicted the duration of the siege of Troy, and other circumstances. He is said to have died of grief at being excelled by Mopsus in the art of divination. Hom. 11. 1. 1, &c.; Æschyl. in Agamem.; Euripid. in Iphigen.; Apollod. 1. 3; Paus. 1. 1.

CALCHINIA (Myth.) a daughter of Leucippus, who had a son by Neptune. Paus. 1. 2.

CAMBERITUM (Geog.) a British town belonging to the Iceni, supposed to be the modern Cambridge.

CAMBRAY (Geog.) a town of French Flanders, formerly the capital of the province of Cambresis, now the head of an arrondissement in the department of the North, 16 miles S. E. Douay, 17 W. Valenciennes, 23 S. E. Arras, and 110 N. N. E. Paris. Lon. 3° 13' E. lat. 50° 10' N.

History of Cambray.

Cambray, called in Latin Camcracum, is said to have been founded by Camber, the king of the Sicambri. It was conquered by Clodion, king of France, in 445; and became a subject of contest between the kings of France, the emperors, and the counts of Flanders. Baldwin I took it, and gave it to his son Rævul, and the emperors declared it a free city, but the French persisted in their claims. Charles V garrisoned it, and fortified it with a citadel; but the duke of Alençon, brother of Henry III, becoming count of Flanders, gained possession of it. The Spaniards surprised and took this place in 1595, after which it remained in their hands till 1677, when it was besieged and taken by Louis XIV, to whom it was ceded by the peace of Nimeguen in 1678. Cambray was the theatre of war during the revolution; and in 1815 it was made the head quarters of the duke of Wellington, after which it was fixed upon as one of the 18 fortresses to be occupied by the allied troops for five years. This place is noted in diplomatic history for the famous league of 1507 against the republic of Venice; for a treaty concluded in 1529 between Francis I, of France, and Charles V, of Germany; for negotiations opened here, but terminated at Vienna, between the emperor Charles VI and Philip V, of Spain, in 1724.

Ecclesiastical History.

The see of Cambray was united to that of Arras as early as 1095, but it was erected into an archbishopric in 1559 by Paul IV at the request of Philip II, of Spain, having for its suffragans Arras, Tournay, Saint Omer, and Namur. The archbishops of Cambray took the title of dukes of Cambray, counts of Cambresis, and princes of the empire. Among the number of those who held this see, the celebrated Fenelon is the most known. A council was held here in 1565, another in 1567, and a third in 1586, besides a synod in 1598, and another in 1551. Guichard. Descript. du Pays. Bas. ; St. Marthe. Gall. Christ.

CAMBRIDGE, Duke of (Her.) a royal title conferred on prince Adolphus Frederic, youngest brother of his present majesty George IV, who was born in 1774, and created in 1801 duke of Cambridge, earl of Tipperary, in Ireland, and baron of Culloeden, in Scotland. He is a knight of the Garter, a lieutenant-general in the army, colonel of the second or Coldstream regiment of foot-guards, and a colonel of the king's German Legion. The arms, crest, and supporters are the same as those of the prince of Wales, with the labels differenced.

CAMBRIDGE (Geog.) a town of England, capital of the county of Cambridge, situated on the river Cam, 11 miles S. Ely, 51 N. London.

History of Cambridge.

This town, which is called in the Latin Cantabrigia, is a place of considerable antiquity, having been a Roman station. In 871 it was burnt by the Danes; but at the survey of Domesday, it was found to consist of 373 houses. It suffered severely from fire in 1174, and from the plague in 1630; but it is chiefly celebrated for its University, for which some writers claim an antiquity that is scarcely admissible. Little is known of its rise or progress previous to the reign of Siebert, king of the East Angles in 630, who was either its founder or reviver. It consists of thirteen colleges, and four halls, for the reception of students, founded in the following order:

Colleges and Halls.	Founded or rebuilt by.	A. D.
St. Peter's, or Peter House.	Hugo de Balsham	1257

CAMBYSES (Hist.) Καμβύσης, a Persian of mean extraction, to whom Astyages gave his daughter in marriage in consequence of a dream which threatened him with the loss of his crown by the hand of his daughter's son. He did not, by this means, avert the evil from himself, for Cyrus, the fruit of this marriage, dethroned him when he came of age. Herod. l. 1; Xenoph. l. 1; Justin. l. 1.

CAMBYSES, the son of Cyrus the Great, succeeded his father on the throne of the Medes and Persians in the 68d Olympiad, A. C. 529, and died of a wound in the thigh after a reign of seven years and eight months. Herod. l. 3; Diodor. l. 2; Val. Max. l. 6; Justin. l. 1.

CAMDEN, Marquis (Her.) one of the titles at present enjoyed by the family of Pratt [vide Pratt], conferred in 1786 on Charles Pratt, once lord chancellor. The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Pratt, marquis Camden, earl Camden, of Camden-place, in Kent, earl of Brecknock, viscount Bayham, and baron Camden.

Arms. Sable, on a fess between three elephants' heads erased argent, as many mullets of the first.

Crest. On a wreath an elephant's head erased argent.

Supporters. On the dexter-side a griffon sable, back and fore-legs gules; on the sinister a lion rampant or, each gorged with a collar argent, charged with three mullets sable.

Motto. "Judicium Parium aut Lex Terræ."

CAMDEN, William (Biog.) one of the most eminent English antiquaries, was born in London in 1551, educated at Oxford, and died in 1623. He wrote, 1. 'Britannia sive Florentissimorum Regnorum Angliæ,' &c. 2. 'Chronographica Descriptio,' first published in 8vo. 1586; the sixth and last edition in fol. 1607, besides other editions abroad; it was translated first by Holland in 1610, and afterwards by bishop Gibson in 1694; and a new edition in 2 vols. fol. 1722, 1753, and 1772. The last and most complete translation was made by Richard Gough, esq. the well-known antiquary. 2. 'Remaines of a Greater Work concerning Britain,' &c. 4to. London, 1605, which has passed through not less than seven editions. 3. 'Annales Rerum Anglicarum et Hibernicarum,' &c. the first part in fol. Lond. 1615; the second part 8vo. Lugd. Bat. 1625, 1639, &c. fol. Lond. 1627; the whole together, published by Hearne from Dr. Smith's copy, corrected by Mr. Camden's own hand, collated with another MS. in Mr. Rawlinson's library, is reckoned the best.

CAMELFORD, Lord (Her.) the title conferred in 1784 on Thomas Pitt, nephew of the earl of Chatham, who was created lord Camelford, of Boconnoc, in Cornwall. The title became extinct at the death of the second lord Camelford, who fell in a duel with Mr. Best in 1804.

CAMPANUS, John Anthony (Ecc.) a poet and prelate of Campania, was born in 1427, promoted to the see of Crotona, and afterwards of Teramo by Pius II, and died in 1477. His works were printed in fol. Rom. 1495.

CAMPASTE (Hist.) or Pancaste, a beautiful mistress of Alexander, from whom Apelles is said to have borrowed the charms with which he invested his Venus Anadyomene. Plin. l. 35.

CAMPBELL, Sir Niel (Hist.) of Lochow, eldest son of Sir Colin Campbell, swore fealty to Edward I, nevertheless he afterwards joined Robert Bruce, adhered to him in prosperity and adversity, and fought by his side in almost every encounter, from the battle of Methven to that of Bannockburn. The king had so high a sense of his services that he gave him his sister, lady Mary, in marriage, besides the lands forfeited by the earl of Atholl. Sir Niel was one of the commissioners sent to York in 1314 to negotiate a peace with the English.

CAMPBELL, Dugal and Arthur, two brothers of the preceding, took the same part in behalf of king Robert, whose favours they shared.

CAMPBELL, Lord Duncan, was one of the list of hostages for the redemption of king James I from captivity in 1424, for which reason he was made his privy counsellor and justiciary.

CAMPBELL, Lord Colin was one of the commissioners for negotiating a truce with king Edward IV, of England, in 1463; and in 1465 was appointed, with Lord Boyd, justiciary of Scotland, which office he filled for many years by himself after the fall of his colleague.

CAMPBELL, Earl of Argyll [vide Argyll]

CAMPBELL, Earl of Breadalbane [vide Breadalbane]

CAMPBELL, Archibald (Ecc.) bishop of Aberdeen, which he resigned in 1724, and died in 1744, leaving a work on a Middle State between Death and the Resurrection, fol. 1721.

CAMPBELL (Her.) the name of an illustrious Scotch house, which is the most numerous of any in Scotland, and of such antiquity that its origin is not to be traced. Historians say that the predecessors of this family were lords of Lochow as early as 404, and that the first appellation which they used was O'Dwbin, or O'Dwin, which was assumed by Dearmed, one of their ancestors, a brave warrior. Duncan Campbell above-mentioned was the first who assumed the title of Argyll, being styled lord of Argyll. His son, the second lord, was created earl of Argyll. Archibald Campbell, tenth earl of Argyll, was advanced to the dignities of duke of Argyll, marquis of Kintyre and Lorn, earl of Campbell and Cowal, viscount of Lochow and Glenila, lord Invernary, Mull, &c. John, the fourth duke of Argyll, was raised to the dignity of a peer of Great Britain in 1706 by the style and title of baron Sundridge, of Coombest, co. Kent, which is one of the titles at present enjoyed by the family of Argyll. [Vide Argyle] John, the son of Sir Niel Campbell before-mentioned, was created earl of Atholl upon the forfeiture of David de Strathbogie, the eleventh earl; but, dying without issue, the title reverted to the crown. [Vide Atholl] From Sir Colin Campbell, the first of the house of Glenurchy, and the third son of Duncan, the first Lord Campbell, of Lochow, before-mentioned, descended, first, Sir John Campbell, of Loudoun, who was created in 1633 earl of Loudoun, Lord Farnham, &c. which titles are at present enjoyed by the family [Vide Loudoun]; secondly, sir John Campbell, of Glenurchy, who was created in 1681 earl of Breadalbane, which title is still enjoyed by this branch of the family. [Vide Breadalbane]

CAMPBELL, a collateral branch of the family of the earl of Breadalbane, at present enjoys the barony of Lude. [Vide Lude]

CAMPBELL, is also the name of the family which enjoys the title of lord Cawdor, conferred on John Campbell in 1706. [Vide Cawdor]

CAMPBELL, a name common to several other families of distinction, which have doubtless branched off from the original stock before-mentioned. Four families of this name at present enjoy the dignity and title of a baronet; namely,

CAMPBELL, of Succouth, of which is sir Ilay Campbell, created a baronet in 1808. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Girony inverted or and sable.

Crest. A camel's head couped proper.

CAMPBELL, of Gartford, co. Ross, of which is sir Alexander Campbell, late commander of the forces at the isles of France and Bourbon, created a baronet in 1815. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly; 1st and 4th, girony of eight or and sable; 2d or, a fess chequy argent and azure; 3d argent, a lymphad sable.

Crest. On a wreath, a naked arm erect, the hand grasping a sword proper.

Motto (round the crest). "Without."

CAMPBELL, a third family, of which is sir Guy Campbell, a lieutenant-colonel in the army, created a baronet in 1815. The arms, &c. of this family are the same as the preceding.

Crest. On a wreath, a boar's head couped or.

Motto. "Follow me."

CAMPBELL, of Inverneil, a fourth family, of which is sir James Campbell, lieutenant-general in the army, created a baronet in 1818.

CAMPBELL, John (Biog.) an historical writer of Edinburgh, was born in 1708, and died in 1775. He contributed to the 'Universal History'; besides writing 'A Political Survey of Great Britain,' 2 vols. royal 4to. 1774, and some other political pieces.

CAMPBELL, George, a Scotch divine, was born in 1719, and died in 1796. He wrote, 1. 'Dissertation on Miracles,' 1763, in answer to Hume's Essay on Miracles, which was translated into French, Dutch, and German. 2. 'Philosophy of Rhetoric,' 1776. 3. 'Translation of the Gospels,' 2 vols. 4to. which was published just before his death.

CAMPEGGIO, Lorenzo (Ecc.) a cardinal, was born at Milan in 1474, created a cardinal by Leo X in 1517, came into England as nuncio in 1519, when he was made bishop of Salisbury, and died in 1529, after having been active in settling the affairs about the divorce of Henry VIII and queen Catharine, and also in opposing the progress of the reformation. His letters, which are the only works of his remaining, were published in 'Epistolarum Miscellaneorum Libri Decem.'

CAMPER, Peter (Biog.) a physician and surgeon of Leyden, was born in 1722, and died in 1789, leaving, 1. 'Demonstratum Anatomico-Pathologicarum Liber Primus,' &c. Amst. 1760; and Lib. Secundus, 1762. 2. 'A Treatise on the Natural Difference of Features,' &c. which was translated into English by Dr. Cogan, under the title of 'The Works of the Late Professor Camper, on the Connection between the Science of Anatomy,' &c. in 2 books, 1794.

CAMRIAN, Edmund (Ecc.) a Jesuit of London, was born in 1449, and executed at Tyburn in 1581, with other Romish priests, on the charge of high treason, by adhering to the bishop of Rome, the queen's enemy. He wrote, among other things, 1. 'Nine Articles directed to the Lords of the Privy Council,' 1581. 2. 'The History of Ireland,' fol. Dublin, 1683, published by sir James Ware. The original MS. is in the British Museum. 3. 'Chronologia Universalis.' 4. 'Conferences in the Tower,' published by the English divines, 4to. 1583. 5. 'Narratio de Divortio,' Antv. 1631. 6. 'De Imitatione Rhetorice,' ibid. 1631. His life, written by Paul Bombino, is very scarce; the best edition is that, in 8vo. Mantua, 1620.

CAMPISTRON, John Galbert (Biog.) a dramatic poet of Toulouse, was born in 1656, and died in 1723. His plays, published in 3 vols. 12mo. 1750, have been nearly as often printed as those of Corneille, Racine, Crebillon, and Voltaire.

CAMPS, Francis de (Biog.) an antiquarian of Amiens, was born in 1643, and died in 1723, leaving several Dissertations on Medals published in the Paris Mercuries for 1719, 1720, 1722, 1723.

CAMPUS, Martius (Topog.) a large plain at Rome without the walls of the city, where games were exhibited, and the youth performed their exercises. Liv. l. 2; Strab. l. 5; Ovid. Fast. l. 2.

CAMUS, Arnaud Gaston (Hist.) an active agent in the French revolution, being sent to arrest Dumourier, was by him delivered to the Austrians, and exchanged for the daughter of Louis XVI.

CAMUS, John Peter (Ecc.) bishop of Bellay, was born at Paris in 1582, nominated to the see of Bellay by Henry IV in 1609, resigned his charge after governing with great zeal for 20 years, and died in 1652. He left a number of works mostly on religious subjects.

CAMUS, Stephen le, bishop and prince of Grenoble, and a cardinal, was born in 1632, nominated to that see in 1671, created a cardinal by Leo XI in 1686, and died in 1707, after having submitted to great mortifications, and led a life of austerity.

CAMUS, Charles Stephen Lewis (Biog.) a mathematician of Cressy en Brie, was born in 1699, and died in 1768, leaving, 1. 'Cours de Mathematiques pour l'Usage des Ingenieurs,' 4 vols. 8vo. 2. 'Elemens de Mechanique.' 3. 'Elemens d'Arithmetique,' besides a number of memoirs printed in the volumes of the Academy.

CAMUS, Anthony le, brother of Arnaud Gaston Camus, mentioned under History, a physician of Paris, was born in 1722, and died in 1772, leaving, 1. 'Medicine de l'Esprit,' 2 vols. 12mo. Paris, 1753. 2. 'Abdeker,' 4 vols. 12mo. 1756. 3. 'Medicine Pratique,' &c.

CAMUS, Nicolas de Mezieres, a brother of the preceding, and an architect, was the author of, 1. 'Le Genie d'Architecture,' 8vo. 1782. 2. 'Le Guide de ceux qui veulent batir,' 2 vols. 8vo. &c.

CAMUSAT, Nicholas (Biog.) an historian of Troyes, was born in 1575, and died in 1655, leaving, 1. 'Chronologia ab Origine Orbis,' &c. 4to. Trec. 1608. 2. 'Melanges Historiques,' &c. 8vo. ibid. 1619. Some of his historical pieces are in Duchesne's Collection of French Historians.

CAMUSAT, Francis Dennis, grandnephew of the preceding, was born in 1697, and died in 1732, leaving, 1. 'Histoires Critiques des Journaux qui s'impriment en France,' 3 vols. 12mo. 2. 'Bibliothèque des Livres Nouveaux,' 2 vols. 8. 'Bibliothèque Francoise,' the first four volumes, which consists of 34 vols. 4to. 4. 'Melanges de Littérature,' &c. 12mo.

CANA (Bibl.) a town of Galilee, where our Saviour changed the water into wine, which St. John calls the beginning of his miracles. John ii.

CANAAN (Bibl.) Ḳanān, the son of Ham, whose posterity inhabited Palestine; it was called from them the land of Canaan: Gen. ix. 25; &c.

CANACHE (Myth.) Κανάχη, a daughter of Æolus and Enaretta, who had a child by Macareus, her brother, is said to have killed herself at the command of her father. Apollod. l. 1; Hygin. Fab. 238; Ovid. Herod. l. 2, &c.

CANAGHOS (Biog.) a statuary of Sicyon, and pupil of Polycletus, of Argos, among whose works was an Apollo for Thebes, in Boeotia. Plin. l. 34; Paus. l. 9.

CANADA (Geog.) an extensive country of N. America, lying between 61° and 81° of W. long., and between 42° and 52° of N. lat.

Boundaries. It is bounded on the E. by New Britain and the Gulf of St. Lawrence; S. E. and S. by the province of New Brunswick, &c.

Division. It was divided in 1791 into the two provinces of Upper and Lower Canada.

Principal Towns. Quebec, the capital, York, Montreal, Kingston, &c.

Rivers and Lakes. Canada is distinguished by its immense rivers and lakes, among which the river St. Lawrence, the lake Superior, Huron, Erie, Ontario, &c. are the principal.

History. Canada is said to have been discovered by John and Sebastian Cabot, in 1497, but it was not until 1608 that a colony was established there by the French, in whose hands it remained until 1759, when it was conquered by the English.

CANAL (Biog.) or Canabetto, Antonio, an eminent painter of Venice, was born in 1697, and died in 1768. He was particularly happy in giving picturesque views.

CANARIES (Geog.) a group of islands in the Atlantic Ocean, 18 in number, of which Teneriffe, Grand Canary, and Fuerteventura are the largest; Palma, Ferro, Gomera, and Lancrota are the next in magnitude; the remaining six, Graciosa, Rocca, Allegranza, St. Clara, Inferno, and Lobos, are little more than rocks. Reckoning from the southern point of Ferro to the northern point of Allegranza, they lie between 28 and 30 N. lat., and reckoning from Rocca to Dessa, the western extremity of Ferro, they lie between 14° and 19° W. lon. These islands were anciently but imperfectly known by the name of the Insulæ Fortunatæ, or Canariæ, and remained in obscurity until the 14th century, when the Spaniards gained possession of them, after a long and violent resistance from the Guanches, the original inhabitants.

CANARI, John Baptist (Biog.) an anatomist of Ferrara, who died in 1590, aged 75, was the author of 'Humani Corporis Picturata Dissectio.'

CANARII (Geog.) a people near mount Atlas, in Africa, who are supposed to have given their name to the Canary islands. Plin. l. 5.

CANAGE, Philip de la (Hist.) Seigneur du Fresne, was born at Paris in 1551, and died in 1610, after having been employed by Henry IV as ambassador in England, Germany, and Venice. He wrote an account of his travels, entitled, 'Ephemerides.'

CANDACE (Hist.) a name common to the queens of Æthiopia. One in particular is alluded to in Scripture, whose eunuch was baptized by Philip the deacon. Acts viii. This is probably the same as the queen mentioned by Pliny, who reigned in the time of Augustus, and was distinguished for her prudence. Strab. l. 17; Plin. l. 6; Dio. l. 54.

CANDAULES (Hist.) Κανδαύλης, or Myrsilus, the son of Myrsus, and the last of the Heraclidae who reigned in Lydia, was murdered by Gyges, at the instigation of his wife, whom he had exposed to the view of the latter. Gyges succeeded to the bed and throne of Candaules. Herod. l. 1, c. 7, &c.

CANDAUUS, the father of Damasthymus, one of the commanders of Xerxes' fleet.

CANDIA (Geog.) one of the largest islands in the Mediterranean, situated to the south of the Græcian Archipelago, being nearly 180 m. in length, and from 20 to 30 in breadth. The principal towns in Candia are Candia, its capital, Setia, Retimo Campo, Mirabel, Suda, Spitholonga, &c.

History of Candia.

After Creta, or Crete, the ancient name of this island, [vide Creta] had remained several centuries in the hands of the Romans, and the emperors of Constantinople, fell into those of the Suracens of Spain in 823, from whom Michael the Stammerer made fruitless efforts to regain it. Photinus, one of his generals, was beaten; and Craterus, who succeeded him, neglecting to avail himself of the advantages he had gained, was taken prisoner in the island of Cos, and crucified; but Nicephorus Phocas, general of Romanus the Younger, was more successful, and retook it in 960. After the capture of Constantinople by the French and the Venetians, Baldwin I., the emperor of Constantinople, gave this island to Boniface, marquis of Montserrat, who sold it to the Venetians in 1204. The Candians revolted in 1364, and wished to transfer their allegiance to the Genoese; but were reduced to obedience by the former. In 1665 the Turks made a sudden attack on Candia, which, after a disastrous war of 20 years, notwithstanding all the exertions of Clement IX., they succeeded in taking, to his inexpressible grief.

Ecclesiastical History of Candia.

Christianity was introduced into this island by St. Paul, [vide Creta] and Titus was the first bishop. There is an archiepiscopal see, and nine suffragans, but Christianity is at a low ebb. Cæren. et Zonar. Annal.; Justinian. Hist. Venet.; Du Cange Hist. Constant.; And. Vallier Guerre de Candie.

CANDIDO, Peter (Biog.) an artist of the 16th century, whose real name was de Witte. He worked, in conjunction with Vasari, at the pope's palace, at Rome, and was also employed by the grand duke of Florence.

CANDIDO, vide Decembrio.

CANENS (Myth.) the daughter of Janus, and wife of Picus, king of the Laurentes, who, when her husband was changed into a bird, lamented him so much that she was changed into a voice. Ovid. Met. l. 4.

CANGE, Charles du Fresne du, vide Du Cange.

CANGIAGI (Biog.) or Cambiaso, Lucas, called also Luchello, a painter of Genoa in the 16th century, whose 'Sleeping Cupid,' and 'Judith with her Attendant,' are much admired.

CANDIDIUS (Hist.) a tribune, who proposed a law to empower Pompey to go with only two lictors, to reconcile Ptolemy and the Alexandrians. Plut. in Pomp.

CANINIUS, C. Rebilus (Hist.) a consul with J. Cesar for only seven hours, because his predecessor died on the last day of the year, and he was chosen for the remainder of the day. Cic. ad Fam. l. 7, ep. 33; Plin. l. 7; Plut. in Cæs.; Macrob. l. 2; Suet. in Cæs. 76.

CANINIUS (Biog.) an intimate friend of Cicero's.

CANINIUS, Angelus, a scholar of the 16th century, was the author of, 1. 'Hellenismus,' a Greek grammar. 2. 'Institutiones Linguarum Syriacæ, Assyriacæ, et Thalmudicæ,' &c. 4to. Paris. 1554.

CANISIUS, Henry (Biog.) or de Hondt, a Jesuit and lawyer of Nimeguen, who died in 1697, wrote, 1. 'Summa Juris Canonici.' 2. 'Commentarium in Regulas Juris.' 3. 'Praelectiones Academicæ,' which were published collectively by Andrew Bouvet, 4to. Lovan. 1649; Colon. 1662.

Besides which he wrote 'Antique Lectiones,' 7 vols. 4to. 1601—1603; reprinted by James Basnage, under the title of 'Thesaurus Monumentorum Ecclesiasticorum et Historicorum,' &c. 4 vols. Amst. 1725.

CANISTIUS (Biog.) a Lacedæmonian courier, who ran 1200 stadia in one day. Plin. l. 7.

CANITZ, Baron Von (Hist.) a statesman, was employed by Frederic II and III, of Prussia, on different negotiations, and died in 1699. His German poems were reprinted for the tenth time in 8vo. 1750.

CANIUS (Biog.) a poet of Gades, cotemporary with Martial. Mart. l. 1, ep. 62.

CANTIUS, a Roman knight, who went to Sicily for his amusement. Cic. de Offic. l. 3.

CANNÆ (Geog.) a small village of Apulia near the Aufidus, memorable for the defeat and slaughter of the Romans under P. Æmilius and Terentius Varro, by Annibal, A. C. 216, when 40,000 Romans were left on the field, which is shown to this day, and is called by the natives the "Field of Blood." Liv. l. 22; Flor. l. 2; Plin. l. 15; Plut. in Annib.

CANO, Alonso (Biog.) an artist of Grenada, who was styled the Michael Angelo of Spain, because he excelled in painting, sculpture, and architecture, was born in 1600, and died in 1676.

CANON (Biog.) or Canonicus, John, by some called Marbres, an English Franciscan monk of the 14th century, published, 1. 'In Aristotelis Physica, Lib. VIII,' 8vo. S. Alban. 1481; reprinted at Venice, in 1481, 1482, and 1505.

CANOPUS (Myth.) the pilot to the ship of Menelaus, who died on the coast of Egypt by the bite of a serpent. He was honoured with a monument on the spot where afterwards the town of Canopus was built. Mel. l. 1; Eustath. in Diog. Per.

CANOPUS (Geog.) now Maadie, a city of Egypt, 12 miles from Alexandria, the inhabitants of which were noted for their effeminacy. Juv. Sat. 15.

— Horrida sanè

CANTABRICUS, Oceanus (Geog.) the Bay of Biscay. [Vide Cantabria]

CANTABRIGIA (Geog.) the Latin name for Cambridge.

CANTACUZENUS, Joannes (Hist.) Emperor of Constantinople, and one of the Byzantine historians, was born in 1195, and is supposed to have lived to the age of 100 and upwards, during which he acted both as a warrior and a statesman in the service of Andronicus till his death, and afterwards as the guardian of Palæologus, until he found it necessary, in self-defence, against the intrigues of the empress dowager, to take the purple upon himself, which however he resigned after five years to John Palæologus, and retired to a monastery, his wife also retiring to a nunnery. In this place he wrote an account of the events which had happened during his public life, namely, from 1320 to 1355. A Latin translation of this history was published by Pontanus, at Ingolstadt, in 1603; and afterwards in 3 vols. fol. Gr. and Lat. Paris, 1645; and again in the 'Corpus Byzantine Historie Scriptorum,' Vol. XXVII, Venet. 1727, &c. Besides this history, Catacuzenus wrote some theological works, particularly an Apology for Christianity against the Mahometans, printed in Gr. and Lat. Basil. 1543.

CANTALUPE, Viscount (Her.) the title borne by the eldest son of the earl of Delawar.

CANTARINI, Simone (Biog.) a painter and engraver of Pesaro, was born in 1612, and died in 1648, not without suspicion of having been poisoned by a painter of Mantua, whom he had reviled. He had been compared to Guido, whom he excelled in grace if not in dignity. Our Saviour standing on the Globe, attended by Cherubims, is considered to be equal to any thing from the pencil of Guido.

CANTEL, Peter Joseph (Biog.) a French Jesuit, was born in 1645, and died in 1684, leaving, 1. 'De Romana Republica,' &c. 12mo. Paris, 1684; Ultraj. 1691, 1696, 1707. 2. 'Metropolitinarum Urbium Historia,' &c. 8vo. Paris, 1684. He also had a part in preparing the Delphin editions of the Classics, and edited Justin, 4to. 1677; Valerius Maximus, 1679.

CANTEMIR, Demetrius (Hist.) a Tartar of illustrious birth, who hoped to succeed his father as governor of Moldavia; but being supplanted by a rival at the Ottoman court, he availed himself of the opportunity of being sent to defend Moldavia against the Russians, to make his court with the czar Peter, by delivering the province over to him, for which he was rewarded with the government, and died in 1723. He wrote a 'History of the Growth and Decay of the Ottoman Empire, from 1300 to 1683,' which was published in an English translation by Tindal, fol. London, 1734; besides a System of the Mahometan Religion, written in Russian; the Present State of Moldavia, written in Latin; the World and the Soul, in Greek and Moldavian; Musical Airs with Turkish Words; and an Introduction to Music, in Moldavian.

CANTEMIR, Antiochus, son of the preceding, was born in 1710, and died in 1744. He displayed his abilities as a negotiator and ambassador at London and Paris; and was likewise author of some odes, satires, and fables; besides a translation of Anacreon, and the epistles of Horace.

CANTERBURY (Geog.) the capital of Kent, in England, situated on the banks of the river Stour, 56 m. S. E. London. Lon. 1° 15' E., lat. 51° 17' N.

History of Canterbury.

Canterbury, which was known to the ancients by the names of Durovernum, or Dorovernum, and in later times by that of Cantwara-byrg, latinized Cantuaria, was evidently a Roman station, as the numerous antiquities which have been dug up sufficiently testify. It was afterwards the residence of the Saxon kings, till the reign of Ethelred, about the year 596. It was at that time entirely surrounded with walls, and defended by a strong castle, which began to be neglected in the reign of queen Elizabeth.

Canterbury is the metropolitan archiepiscopal see of all England; which rank was assigned to it by queen Elizabeth, after many and long contests between the sees of Canterbury and York. The archbishop takes precedence of all the peers of Great Britain, except those of the blood-royal; and at coronations he puts the crown on the head of the sovereign. The first archbishop of Canterbury was St. Augustine, the apostle of the English, and among his successors Thomas à Becket and Anselm are the most distinguished. Not less than eight councils have been held in this city, namely, one by St. Augustine, in 604; another in 605, at which Ethelbert V and his queen Bertha, also his son Eadbald, were present; a third in 705; a fourth in 785; a fifth in 820; a sixth in 1236; a seventh in 1396; and the eighth in 1439. At the dissolution of the religious houses in 1538, Henry VIII appropriated to himself the treasures of Canterbury cathedral, which, from the offerings perpetually made at the shrine of Becket, had accumulated to an immense extent.

CANTERUS, William (Biog.) a critic and grammarian, of an ancient family of Utrecht, was born in 1542, and died in 1575, leaving, among his works, 1. 'Novarum Lectionum Libri Octo,' 8vo. Basil. 1564, 1571. 2. 'Syntagma de Ratione emendendi Græcos Autores,' printed in the last-mentioned edition of the former. 3. 'Notæ, Scholia, Emendationes, &c. in Euripidem, Sophoclem, Æschylum,' &c.

CANTERUS, Theodore, brother of the preceding, and also a classic, left many annotations and criticisms, some of which are preserved in Gruter's Thesaurus. Burman has given an ample catalogue of the writings of these two brothers.

CANTON, John (Biog.) a natural philosopher of Stroud, in Gloucestershire, was born in 1718, and died in 1772. He communicated many papers on electricity and chemistry to the Royal Society, of which he was a member.

CANTHARUS (Biog.) a sculptor of Sicily, some of whose statues were preserved at Olympia. Plin. l. 34.

CANTHARUS, a comic poet of Athens. Suidas.

CANTIUM (Geog.) a country in the eastern parts of Britain, now Kent, the inhabitants of which were called Cantiani. Cæs. de Bell. Gall. l. 5.

CANTUARIA (Geog.) the Latin name in the middle ages for Canterbury. [Vide Canterbury]

CANULEIUS, C. (Hist.) a tribune of the people, U. C. 310, who made it lawful for the patricians and plebeians to intermarry, and also ordained that one of the consuls should be yearly chosen from the plebeians. Liv. l. 4; Flor. l. 1.

CANUS, James (Hist.) was the discoverer of the kingdom of Congo, in 1484.

CANUS, John Sebastian, a Biscayan, and the companion of the famous Magellan in his voyages of discovery; returned after the death of the latter to Seville, in 1522, having made the circuit of the world by the east in three years and four weeks.

CANUS, Melchior (Ecc.) a Spanish divine of Tarazona, in the diocese of Toledo, was made bishop of the Canary Islands in 1552, which he afterwards resigned, and died in 1560. His treatise, 'De Locis Theologicis,' was published in 4to. Patav. 1727; and to him is attributed also the 'Prælectiones de Penitentia.' His whole works were printed in 4to. Venet. 1759.

CANUSIUM (Geog.) a town of Apulia, now Canosa, whither the Romans fled after the battle of Cannæ. It was built by Diomedes, according to Horace, who complains of the bread being gritty there.

Horat. l. 1, sat. 5.

Non Canus lapideus; aquæ non ditior urna:

Qui locus à forti Diomede est conditus olim.

The wool and the cloths manufactured from it were here of a superior quality.

Mart. l. 14, ep. 127.

*Heribiti turbati Canusina similis mulo
Munus erit, gaudet, non cito fit anus.*

Cæs. de Bell. Civ. l. 1; Liv. l. 9; Mel. l. 2; Strab. l. 6; Plin. l. 8; Sueton. in Ner. c. 30; Ptol. l. 3.

CANUTE (Hist.) or Cnut, a name common to several kings of Denmark, and other princes.

CANUTE I, surnamed the Little, succeeded his father Eric on the throne of Denmark in 861.

CANUTE II, surnamed the Great, succeeded not only to the throne of Denmark, as his inheritance, but also to that of England, Norway, and Sweden, by conquest in 1015, and died after a glorious reign of 25 years.

CANUTE III, vide Hardi Canute.

CANUTE IV, surnamed the Proud, succeeded Harold in 1080, and was slain in an insurrection by one of his subjects in 1087.

CANUTE V, succeeded Eric V, in 1147, and was killed by one Suenon, at a feast, in 1155.

CANUTE VI, succeeded his father Valdemir, in 1182, and died in 1210.

CANUTE, Ericson, son of Eric IX, succeeded to the throne of Sweden, after having put Charles VII to death, and died in 1192.

CANUTE, son of Eric III, king of Denmark, obtained the government of Sleswick, and was afterwards made king of the Obodrites, i. e. of Holstein and Mecklenburg; but was perfidiously slain by his cousin Magnus. Sax. Grammat.; Magn. Hist. Succ.; Matt. of Westm.; Polyd. Vergel. &c.

CANUTI, Dominico (Biog.) an Italian painter, whose pieces are preserved at Rome and Bologna. He died in 1678, at the age of 55.

CANUTIUS, Tiberinus (Hist.) a tribune of the people, and a violent opponent to Anthony, fell a victim to the violence of his opposition. Paterc. l. 2, c. 64.

CAPACCIO, Julius Cæsar (Biog.) an historian of Campagna, who died in 1631, wrote 'Historia Puteolana,' 'Historia Neapolitana,' which are in Grævius' Thesaurus, besides other things.

CAPANÆUS (Myth.) Κανανῆος, a noble Argive, whom Jupiter is said to have struck dead with a thunderbolt, in revenge for his impiety, in saying that he would take Thebes in spite of the gods. Hom. Il. l. 5; Euripid. in Phœnis; Æschyl. in Sept. ante Theb.; Apollod. l. 3; Hygin. Fab. 68; Ovid. Met. l. 9, &c.; Propert. l. 1; Stat. Theb. l. 3, &c.; Paus. l. 10; Fægel. l. 4, &c.

CAPECIO, Scipio (Biog.) in Latin Capycius, a poet of Naples in the 16th century, was the imitator of Lucretius, in his poem of the 'Principles of Things,' 8vo. Francof. 1631, and with an Italian translation, Venice, 1754. He also composed Elegies, Epigrams, and a Poem 'De Vate Maximo,' i. e. St. John the Baptist.

CAPEL, Sir Giles (Hist.) of the family of Capel, or Capell, mentioned under Heraldry, was knighted for his valour at the sieges of Teroven and Tournay, and the action that ensued at Guinegate, 5 Hen. VIII, commonly called the Battle of Spurs, and served the king on several other occasions.

CAPEL, Arthur, Lord, distinguished himself for his loyalty, and after having raised some troops of horse in defence of his sovereign, and rendered all the personal service in his power, he was at length beheaded by the rebels in 1648, in violation of the terms on which he surrendered himself, and the fortress of Colchester. His literary remains were published in 1654, under the title of 'Daily Observations or Meditations,' &c.

CAPEL, vide Essex.

CAPEL (Her.) or Capell, as it was formerly, and now is written, the name of a family which from a remote antiquity have been lords of the manor of Stanton, in Suffolk. This family has enjoyed the dignity of the peerage since the time of Charles I, when lord Arthur Capel, before-mentioned under History, was created in 1641 a baron, by the title of lord Capel, of Hadham, co. Herts. His son, Henry Capel, was in 1661 advanced to the dignity of viscount Malden, and earl of Essex. [Vide Essex] His brother Henry was created in 1692 a baron of this realm by the title of lord Capel, of Tewksbury, which became extinct at his death.

CAPEL, Edward (Biog.) of the same family, was born in 1713, and died in 1781. He made voluminous collections for an edition of Shakspeare; and the fruit of his labours were published after his death, under the title of 'Notes and Various Readings of Shakspeare,' &c. 3 vols. 4to. 1783. He was also the editor of 'Prolusions,' a volume of ancient poems.

CAPELLA, Martianus Minius Felix (Biog.) a Latin poet of Africa, in the fifth century, was the author of a poem mixed with prose, entitled 'De Nuptiis Philologiae et Mercurii, et de Septem Artibus Liberalibus,' which Grotius is said to have edited at the age of 14. The best edition is that of Walthardus, 8vo. Rom. 1763.

CAPELLO, Bianca (Hist.) a Venetian lady, who was first the mistress, and afterwards the wife of Francis Cosmo, grand duke of Florence. She died suddenly, within a few days of her husband, not without suspicion of both having been poisoned by the cardinal Ferdinand, his brother.

CAPELUS (Biog.) or Cappell, Lewis, a Protestant divine of Sedan, in Champagne, was born in 1579, and died in 1658. He was the opponent of the Buxtorfs, on the antiquity of the Hebrew points, which he denied to be coeval with the language itself. He wrote, 1. 'Arcanum Punctuationis Revelatum,' &c. 2. 'Critica Sacra,' fol. Paris, 1650. 3. 'Chronologia Sacra,' 4to. Paris, 1655, &c.

CAPENA, Porta (Topog.) now Porta di S. Sebastiano, a gate of Rome, so called because the roads through it lead to a small town of the same name; it was, also called Appia, because the Appian road commenced there. Ovid. Fast. l. 5.

CAPITOLINUS (Hist.) the surname of M. Manlius, who was thrown down from the Tarpeian rock for his ambition. [Vide Manlius]

CAPITOLINUS, Caius Julius, a consul with the emperor Aurelian, A. D. 274.

CAPITOLINUS, Corn. (Biog.) a Latin historian of the third century, was the author of a work quoted by Trebellius Pollio, which is not now extant.

CAPITOLINUS, Julius, a Latin historian of the third and fourth centuries, composed the lives of Antoninus Pius, and Verus, addressed to Diocletian; those of Claudius Albinus, Maximinus, the two Maximini, and the three Gordiani, dedicated to Constantine, besides some others not now extant.

CAPITOLINUS, Mons (Topog.) a mountain of Rome, now called in the Italian, Campidoglio, which was named Saturnius, because Saturn dwelt there; Tarpeius, from the virgin Tarpeia, who was buried under the bucklers of the Sabines; and lastly, Capitolinus, from the head of one Telus, as is said, which was dug up while digging the foundations of Jupiter's temple. [Vide Capitolium]

CAPITOLIUM (Topog.) a celebrated temple and citadel at Rome, built on the Mons Capitolinus, which was begun by Servius Tullius, finished by Tarquin the Proud, and dedicated to Jupiter by Horatius Pulvillus. It was burnt in the time of Sylla, with the books of the Sibyls; and again under Vitellius, as also under Titus. Domitian rebuilt it, and instituted the Capitoline games, to be celebrated there every five years. The Christians have since erected a church on this mountain, dedicated to the Holy Virgin. *Dionys. CAPNIO, John (Biog.) vide Reuchlin.

CAPORALI, Cæsar (Biog.) a poet of Perugia, was born in 1530, and died in 1601, leaving some poems of the romantic cast, collected and published at Venice in 1656, and 1662.

CAPPADOCIA (Geog.) a country of Asia Minor, forming a part of the modern Natolia, which by the Turks has been divided into four provinces, namely, Genech, Suas, Amadolia, and Amasia.

History of Cappadocia.

Cappadocia was once a kingdom founded by Pharnaces, A. M. 3475, A. C. 560; between whom and Ariarathes I, six other kings reigned who are unknown. The following is the list of kings from that period.

Kings.	U. C.	A. C.
Ariarathes I.....	392	362
Orophernes.
Ariarathes II.....	424	330
Ariarathes III.....	437	317
Arsamnes
Ariarathes IV.....	492	262
Ariarathes V.....	530	224
Ariarathes VI.....	592	162
Ariarathes VII.....	625	129
Ariarathes VIII and IX
Arioharanes.....	665	89
Ariarathes X.....	712	42
Archelaus.....	713	41

This kingdom, which lasted between four and five hundred years, ended at the death of Archelaus, A. D. 16, and then became a Roman province. In the 13th century, after the taking of Constantinople by the Latins, Isaac Comnenus established in Cappadocia the empire of Trebizond, so called from the name of its capital. The last emperor of Trebizond was David, surnamed Calo-John, who was taken by Mahomet in 1461, and killed with his children. Herod. l. 1, c. 78, &c.; Strab. l. 11; Paterc. l. 2; Mel. l. 1; Justin. l. 2; *Corn. CAPRI (Geog.) the ancient Capræ, an island about three miles from the coast of the Principato di Salerno, opposite Sorrento, 20 m. S. Naples, lon. 14° 10' E., lat. 40° N.

CAPUA (Geog.) the chief city of Campania, in Italy, now called Capua, a town of Terra di Lavona, situated at the foot of a mountain, on the river Volturno, 15 m. N. Naples, 25 W. Benevento, 95 S.E. Rome. Lon. 14° 10' E., lat. 41° N.

History of Capua.

Capua is said to have had for its founder Capys, the companion of Æneas. Virg. Æn. l. 10.

Et Capys, hinc nomen Campanæ ducitur urbis.

It was once so opulent that it had the name of altera Roma, but after its surrender to the troops of Annibal; U. C. 538, A. C. 216, and recapture by the Romans, it was punished for its perfidy by the Roman consuls, Fulvius and Claudius. As a Roman colony it was destroyed by Genseric, king of the Vandals, in the sixth century, and rebuilt by Narses. The Lombards afterwards destroyed it a second time, and laid, as is supposed, the foundation of the modern Capua, which is about two miles distant from the ancient site, where nothing remains but a village. Capua was fortified by Vauban, has a strong citadel, and is accounted the key of Naples on the N. In 1799, this town was occupied by a body of French troops, who were compelled to surrender to captain Trowbridge; and in 1803, it was greatly damaged by an earthquake.

Ecclesiastical History of Capua.

Capua was erected by pope John XIV into an archbishopric. Two councils were held here, namely, in 390, and 1087. Cic. in Philip. 12, c. 3; C. Nep. in Ann.; Paterc. l. 1; Liv. l. 4, &c.; Flor. l. 1; Plut. in Ann.; Leand. Descript. Ital.; Cluver. Ital. Antiq. l. 4; Scipio. Mazell. Descript. Del. Reg. Napol.

CARACCI (Biog.) the name of three painters of Bologna, who founded the school which goes by their name. Ludovico Caracci was born in 1555, and was cousin-german to Agostino and Hannibal, who were brothers. The first died at the age of 63, the second at the age of 45, and the third at that of 49. The altar piece of St. John the Baptist, formerly in the Certosa of Bologna, now in the Louvre, is reckoned the best specimen of Ludovico's skill. Agostino displayed his best powers in the Communion of St. Jerome, formerly at the Certosa, now in the Louvre. Hannibal has left specimens of his skill in the art in the Farnese gallery at Rome. Augustine Caracci had a natural son, who showed great genius for painting, but died at the early age of 31. [Vide Plate XXXV]

CARACCIO, Anthony (Biog.) baron of Corano, and a poet of Nardo, in the kingdom of Naples, who died in 1702, wrote 'Imperio Vindicta,' an epic poem in forty cantos, 4to. Rome, 1690, and some tragedies printed at Rome, 1698.

CARACCIOLI (Hist.) an ancient and illustrious house of Naples, which deduces its origin from Greece, and settled in the kingdom of Naples.

CARACCIOLI, John, grand senechal of the kingdom of Naples, was, for a time, in favour with Joan, queen of Naples, who had conceived an illicit passion for him; but, falling afterwards into disgrace with her, she put him to death in 1432. Marian. l. 21, c. 5.

CARACCIOLI (Ecc.) or Caracciolo, Robert, often called Robertus de Licio, a Franciscan, and a descendant of the illustrious family of the Caraccioli, was made successively bishop of Aquino, of Lecce, and of Aquila, and died in 1495, leaving many sermons and theological works.

CARACCIOLI, Martinus, son of Domitius Caraccioli, lord of Ruvo, was sent by the duke of Milan to the council of Lateran in 1515, by pope Leo X as nuncio into Germany in 1520; and, after being in the service of Charles V as ambassador to Venice, and on other occasions, he was created a cardinal by Paul III in 1535, and died in 1538.

CARACCIOLI, Lewis Anthony (Biog.) a nobleman, who was born in 1723, and died in 1803, wrote, among other things, 'Ganganelli's Letters,' which were for a time ascribed to that pontiff, and were translated into English.

CARACTACUS (Hist.) a king of the Britons, who, being conquered by Ostorius, A. D. 41, was sent in chains to Rome, where his boldness gained him the friendship and esteem of the emperor Claudius. Tacit. Annal. l. 12, c. 30.

CARAMBIS (Geog.) now Kerempe, a promontory of Paphlagonia. Mel. l. 1; Plin. l. 4, &c.

History of Carthage.

Carthage, called by the Romans Carthago Nova, [vide Carthago] was almost destroyed by the Goths in the fifth century; but was repaired and fortified by Philip II. It is the see of a bishop, suffragan of Toledo.

CARTHAGO (Geog.) Carthage, called by the Greeks Καρχάκη, a well-known city of Africa, and a formidable rival of Rome, was either built or enlarged by Dido, A.C. 869; and, according to Livy, 93 years before the foundation of Rome, but Patereulus makes it 65 years, Justin 72, and Eusebius dates its foundation 70 years subsequent to that of Rome.

*Urbs antiqua fuit; Tyrii tenuere coloni;
Carthago, Italiam contra Tiberinaque longe
Ostia, dives opum, studiisque aspernata belli.*

It maintained three famous wars against the Romans, which were distinguished by the name of Punic wars, in the last of which Annibal acted so distinguished a part: but destruction awaited it at the hands of the victorious Scipio Africanus, who totally destroyed it, A.C. 147, after it had flourished upwards of 700 years. When it was set on fire by the Romans, it is said to have burnt incessantly for 17 days. Cæsar planted a small colony on the ruins of this city, part of which was rebuilt by Adrian, and called Adrianopolis. It was taken from the Romans by Genseric, A.D. 439, and was the seat of the Vandal empire for more than a century, when it fell into the hands of the Saracens, after which it was deserted and fell into insignificance. The Carthaginians were proverbially a faithless people, and punica fides was another term for treachery, whence Horace calls it impia.

Hor. l. 4, od. 8.

Non incendia Carthaginis impia.

After the introduction of Christianity, Carthage was the metropolitan see of Africa, and during the third century several councils were held there, but after its conquest by the Saracens, the Christian religion was extirpated from Africa. Polyb. l. 1; Cic. in Agr. Liv. l. 4; Patere. l. 1; Strab. l. 17; Mel. l. 1, &c.; *Joseph. CARUS, M. Aurelius (Hist.) or, according to Vopiscus, Manlius Aurelianus Carus, a Roman emperor, and native of Illyricum, succeeded at the death of Probus, A.D. 282, and died from the blow of a thunderbolt, or, according to other accounts, of disease, after a reign of not two years. Vopisc. in Vit.; Entrop. l. 9; Aurel. Vict. &c.

CARUS (Numis.) the medals of this emperor bear his effigy, as in the annexed figure; inscriptions, IMP. CARUS. AUG.—IMP. C. M. AUR. CARUS P. F. AUG. DIVO CARO AUG. &c. On the reverse, ADVENTUS CAR. AUG.—CLEMENTIA TEMP.—FELICITAS REIPUBLICÆ, &c.

CARUSIUS (Biog.) or Curusio, John Baptist, an historiographer of Palermo, was born in 1673, and died in 1724, or as some say in 1760. He published, 1. 'Memorie Istoriche della Sicilia,' fol. Palermo, 1716. 2. 'Bibliotheca Historica Regni Siciliae,' 2 vols. fol. 1723, an Italian translation, 3 vols. fol. 1745.

CARY, Robert (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was noted for his valour, which he displayed conspicuously in accepting the challenge of an Arragonian knight, whom he overthrew in combat, for which he was knighted by the king, at the commencement of the 15th century.

CARY, Sir William, of Cockington, Knight, sided with Henry VI at the battle of Tewkesbury, against Edward IV, and being taken in the church whither he had fled for refuge, was, in violation of the promise of pardon, beheaded in 1471.

CARY, Sir Henry, vide Falkland.

CARY, Lawrence, brother of Henry, second viscount Falkland, was killed fighting under sir Charles Coote, when he defeated the rebels at Swords in 1642.

CARY (Her.) an ancient family, seated for many ages in the counties of Devon and Somerset, was formerly written Karry. The first of this family that was ennobled, was Henry Cary, who by the marriage of his father William, with Mary Bulleyne, sister to queen Anne Bulleyne, was allied to queen Elizabeth, by whom he was created in 1559 lord Hunsdon. His fourth son Robert, was created in 1626 lord Leppington, and earl of Monmouth. Henry Cary, the fourth lord Hunsdon, was created in 1621 viscount Rochford, and in 1627 earl of Dover. These titles are now all extinct, namely, that of lord Hunsdon, at the death of William, Ferdinand, eighth lord in 1765; that of earl of Monmouth, &c. at the death of Henry, the second earl, in 1661; that of earl of Dover, &c. at the death of John Cary, the second earl, and fifth lord Hunsdon in 1677. Another branch of this family at present enjoys the title of viscount Falkland, which was conferred in 1620 on sir Henry Carey, who was descended from sir John Carey, the elder brother of the William before-mentioned. [Vide Falkland]

It is commonly divided into Old and New Castile. The chief towns of Old Castile are Burgos, the capital, Valladolid, Segovia, Avila, Calahorra, Logrono, and Soria; those of New Castile are Madrid, the capital, Toledo, the former capital, Alcala, Ciudad Real, &c.

History of Castile.

Castile, in Spanish Castellania, and in the Latin of the middle ages Castella, is supposed by some to derive its origin from an old Spanish tribe, called by the Romans Castellani; although others suppose it to have received this name from a castle or fortress which was erected on the frontiers as a barrier against the Moors, when they were driven out; whence also this province took a castle for its arms. After Castile shook off the yoke of the Moors, it was governed by counts of its own, from the time of Don Ferdinand Gonzalez, about 913, to Don Garcias Sanchez, surnamed the Great King of Navarre, who erected Castile in 1029 into a kingdom, which he left to his second son Don Ferdinand, who was also surnamed the Great. He conquered the kingdom of Leo, which, in the reign of Ferdinand II in 1217, was united for ever to that of Castile; and in 1474 these two kingdoms were united to that of Arragon, in the persons of Ferdinand and Isabella. The following is a list of the kings of Castile, or of Leon and Castile.

CATANIA (Geog.) the ancient and famous town of Catania, in Sicily [vide Catana], which, notwithstanding the serious injuries it has sustained at different times from the irruption of the lava, still holds a considerable rank among the towns of modern Europe. It is situated in the Val Demona, on the east coast of the island, 35 m. N. Syracuse, 50 S. S. W. Messina, and 85 E. S. E. Palermo. Lon. 15° 6' E., lat. 37° 30' N. In 1693 the whole town was thrown down by an earthquake, and suffered very materially by a second shock in 1783. Catania is a bishop's see, suffragan of Montreal.

CATESBY, Mark (Biog.) a naturalist of the 17th century, who died in 1741, aged 70, was the author of The Natural History of Carolina, Florida, and the Bahama Islands, &c. fol. 1730—1748.

CATHCART, Alan, third Lord (Hist.) fell at the battle of Pinky, against the English, upon that fatal day the 10th of September, 1547.

CATHCART, Alan, fourth Lord, was zealous in defence of king James VI, of Scotland, and among the first of the peers who took up arms against Bothwell. He was at the battle of Langside, in 1568, where queen Mary's forces were completely routed; and always continued on the king's side till he was seated peaceably on the throne.

CATHCART, Charles, eighth Lord, being bred to arms under the duke of Marlborough, was sent as commander-in-chief on the expedition against the Spanish settlements in South America; but died on his passage thither in 1740.

CATHCART (Her.) a noble family, of which mention is made as early as 1178, when Reynaldus de Kathcart was witness in a grant by Alan, the son of Walter, Dapifer Regis, of the patronage of the church of Kathcart, to the monastery of Paisley. Sir Alan Cathcart, a descendant of his, was in 1442 raised by king James II, of Scotland, to the peerage, and ranked as baron Cathcart among the greater barons, who are now lords of Parliament. William, the tenth lord Cathcart, was, for his military services on different occasions, rewarded with a British peerage, by the titles of viscount Cathcart and baron Greenock, and in 1814 was further advanced to the dignity of earl Cathcart. The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Cathcart, earl Cathcart, viscount Cathcart, baron Greenock, in the peerage of the United Kingdom, and baron Cathcart, in Scotland. The title of the earl's eldest son is lord Greenock.

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth azure, three crosses crolets fitchée issuing out of as many crescents argent; second and third gules, a lion rampant argent.

Crest. On a wreath a dexter hand couped above the wrist and erect proper, grasping a crescent, as in the arms.

Supporters. Two parrots proper.

Motto. "I hope to speed."

CATHERINE (Hist.) a name common to two empresses and several queens.

Empresses of this Name.

zerbat, in Upper Saxony, and wife of Peter, duke of Holstein, afterwards Peter III, paved the way for herself to the empire, in 1762, by the murder of her husband and prince Ivan, the grandson of Peter the Great; and after a glorious and useful reign died in 1797, of an apoplectic fit. [Vide Plate II]

Queens of this Name.

CATHERINE, a daughter of Charles VI, of France, was born in 1401, married in 1420 to Henry V, of England, and on his death, two years after, to Owen Tudor, a Welchman, by whom she had Edmund, earl of Richmond, the father of Henry VII. She died in 1438.

CATHERINE of Arragon, daughter of Ferdinand V, of Castile, married in 1501 Arthur, son of Henry VII, and he dying in five months after, she was married in 1509 to Henry VIII, by whom she was the mother of Mary. Notwithstanding that her conduct as a wife was exemplary, yet the capricious and lustful monarch thought proper to divorce her, and on the refusal of the pope to ratify this divorce, he broke with the church of Rome, and set on foot the Reformation. She wrote some religious pieces, and died at Kimbolton in 1536, universally respected. [Vide Plate VI]

CATHERINE de Medicis, queen of France, daughter of Lorenzo de Medicis, married in 1534 Henry, duke of Orleans, son of Francis I, by whom she had ten children, three of whom became successively kings of France, and a daughter queen of Navarre. She died in 1589, at the age of 70, after having taken an active part in the intrigues and vices of the times. [Vide Plate VI]

CATHERINE Howard, vide Howard.

CATHERINE Parr, vide Parr.

CATHERINE of Austria, daughter of the emperor Ferdinand I, and Anne of Hungary, was born in 1534, married first to Francis de Gonzague, duke of Mantua, and afterwards to Sigismund-Augustus, king of Poland, and died in 1572.

CATHERINE of Austria, daughter of Philip, archduke of Austria, and queen of Portugal, was married in 1525 to John III, of Portugal; and after governing with much wisdom the kingdom, during the minority of her grandson Sebastian, she died in 1577, aged 72.

CATHERINE of Poland, queen of Sweden, and daughter of Sigismund I, king of Poland, was married to John, the brother of Eric XIV, of Sweden, who being deposed, John was raised to the throne in his stead. This queen died in 1583, after having exerted herself zealously to re-establish the Catholic religion in Sweden.

CATHERINE of Portugal, wife of Charles II, of England, and daughter of John IV, of Portugal, was not successful in fixing the affections of her husband, although she was not deficient in attractions. At the death of Charles she returned to Portugal, where she governed with much vigour and prudence, as regent for her brother Peter II, and died in 1705.

CATHERINE, St. (Ecc.) a virgin of Alexandria, of considerable learning and distinguished piety, who is said to have suffered martyrdom in the reign of Maximin.

CATHERINE, St., a virgin of Sweden, and daughter of Ulphon Guthmarson, prince of Nericia, in Sweden, was born about 1330; and being educated by her mother Brigitta in the strictest piety, she persuaded her husband Egard to abstain from her bed, and to allow her to retire to a monastery, where she died in 1381.

CATHERINE, St., of Sienna, a nun in that city, was born in 1347, and died in 1380, no less distinguished for her talents than her piety, for which last she was canonized by Pius II in 1461. She wrote Letters, Poems, Legends, &c., which were all collected and published in 4 vols. 4to. Sienna, 1707.

CATIENUS, P. Plotinus (Biog.) a freedman, so attached to his patron, that he threw himself on his funeral pile, though appointed heir of all his fortune. Plin. l. 7.

CATILINA, L. Sergius, a Roman of a noble family, who for his debaucheries, being refused the consulship, conspired with his dissolute companions to extirpate the senate, and to set Rome on fire. The conspiracy was timely discovered by the consul Cicero, who punished many of the conspirators, but Catiline escaping, was killed in battle, A. C. 63. Sallust. in Cat.; Cic. in Cat.

CATILLUS (Myth.) or Catilus, a son of Amphiaraus, who assisted Turnus against Æneas. Virg. Æn. l. 7.

CATINAT, Nicholas (Hist.) a distinguished general in the reign of Louis XIV, who after signalizing himself at Maestricht, Besançons, Valenciennes, St. Omer, Ghent, &c. and rising by his merit to the chief command, died in 1712, aged 74.

CATIUS, M. (Biog.) an Epicurean of Tnsabria, who wrote on the summum bonum, &c. Quintil. l. 10.

CATIVULCUS (Hist.) a king of the Eburones, who poisoned himself that he might not fall into Cæsar's hands. Cæs. de Bell. Gall. l. 6.

CATO (Hist.) the name of an illustrious branch of the family of the Porcii.

CATO, grandfather to Cato the censor, was distinguished for his valour in battle, when he had five horses killed under him. Plut. in Cat.

CATO, M. Porcius, surnamed the Censor, because he exercised that office with primitive rigour; also Major, in distinction from Cato Uticensis, or Minor; was successively questor, ædile, prætor, and consul, in which he signalized himself by his courage, as he did afterwards by his integrity as censor, and died, as is generally supposed, at the age of 86 or 90. He wrote many orations, besides a book entitled 'Origines,' of which some fragments suspected to be supposititious are extant; and also a work 'De Re Rustica,' the best edition of which is that of Gessner, 2 vols. 4to. Lips. 1735. Cic. Academ. de Senectut. &c.; C. Nep. et Plut. in Vit.; Plin. l. 7, c. 14.

CATO, Marcus, son of the preceding, signalized himself in Macedonia, under Paulus Æmylius, whose daughter he married. Plut. in Cat.

CATO, M. Portius, eldest son of the preceding, was consul U. C. 636.

CATO, C., brother of the preceding, and a consul, U. C. 640, was condemned for extortion in Macedonia by the Mamilian law, and retired in exile to Tarragona, in Spain. Cic. in Ferr. 18.

CATO, Salomianus, son of M. Portius Cato, by Salonia, a daughter of his client when he was 80 years of age, died a prætor.

CATO, Lucius, son of Cato Salomianus, was a consul with Cn. Pompeius Strabo, U. C. 664, during the civil war in which he perished. Appian. de Bell. Civ. l. 1.

CATO, M., surnamed Uticensis, or Minor, grandson of Cato Salomianus, and great grandson of Cato Major, or the Censor, distinguished himself for his zealous adherence to the republic, at a time that it was torn by intestine dissensions. He supported Cicero in his measures against the accomplices of Catiline, who were capitally punished chiefly through his instigation. When Cæsar passed the Rubicon, he advised the senate to deliver the care of the republic into Pompey's hands, and when, after the fatal battle of Thapsus, the conqueror approached the city of Utica, whither Cato had fled for the purpose of making a stand, the latter stabbed himself, A. C. 46, in the 49th year of his age, when he found resistance unavailable.

CATO, a son of Cato Uticensis, who after he had been pardoned by Cæsar, fell in the battle of Philippi, which was fought against Augustus and Anthony, U. C. 712, A. C. 45.

CATO, Valerius (Biog.) a grammarian of Gallia Narbonensis, in the time of Sylla, who instructed many noble Romans, and wrote some poems, of which one called 'Dira,' is still extant, and was published by Christopher Arnold, Lugd. 12mo. 1652, and reprinted by Mattaire in his 'Corpus Poetarum'; but it has been doubted whether this poem belonged to Cato Valerius, and has been ascribed to Virgil.

CATROU, Francis (Biog.) a writer of Paris, was born in 1659, and died in 1737, leaving, 1. 'Histoire Generale de l'Empire du Mogul,' 4to. or 2 vols. 12mo. Paris, 1705, and often reprinted. 2. A Prose translation of Virgil, 6 vols. 12mo. Paris, 1716, and 4 vols. 1729. 3. 'Histoire Romaine,' 20 vols. 4to. translated into English by Dr. Richard Bundy, 6 vols. fol. 1728.

CATUALDA (Hist.) a German prince in the time of Tiberius, who attached himself to the Romans, from whom he sought assistance. He was afterwards driven from his states by the Hermunduri, and compelled to seek an asylum at Frejus, in Provence. Tac. Annal. l. 2; c. 62, &c.

CATULLUS (Hist.) a governor of Lybia, in Pentapolitana, who after the taking of Jerusalem, put to death vast numbers of the Jews, and was afterwards cut off, according to Josephus, by a horrible disease. Joseph. de Bell. Jud. l. 7.

CATULLUS, Caius, (Biog.) or Quintus Valerius, a poet of a good family of Verona, A.C. 86, died at the age of 46, leaving a reputation nowise inferior to that of Virgil. The best edition of Catullus is that of Vulpius, 2 vols. 4to. Patav. 1755.

CATULUS, C. Lutatius (Hist.) a Roman commander, who gained a complete victory over the Carthaginians near the island of Ægates, under Amilcar, in which he is said to have destroyed 50 of their ships, and taken 70. This victory terminated the first Punic war. Polych. l. 1; Liv. l. 7.

CATULUS, Q. Lutatius, a consul with Marius, U.C. 652, A.C. 102, who shared in the victory and triumph over the Cimbri. He afterwards took the part of Sylla against Marius, and being proscribed by the latter, put an end to his life by shutting himself up in a newly plastered room, where he was suffocated with the smoke of burning coals. In revenge for his death, the brother of Catullus obtained permission of Sylla to sacrifice the brother of Marius at his tomb, to which Lucan refers.

Luc. l. 2, v. 173.

*Quid sanguine mæstæ
Placatos Catuli referam? cui victor et tristes
Inferias Marne, —*

He wrote memoirs of his own consulship, besides orations and poems, of which only ten verses are preserved. Cic. de Offic. l. 1, c. 37; Plut. in Mar.

CATULUS, Q., son of the preceding, and a consul with Lepidus, U.C. 676, supported Cicero in his measures against the accomplices of Catiline, and was the first to hail him with the epithet of "Father of his country."

CATURIGES (Geog.) a people of Gaul, now Chorges, near the source of the Durance. Cæs. de Bell. Gall. l. 1; Plin. l. 3.

CAVE, Edward, the first editor of the Gentleman's Magazine, was born at Newton, in Warwickshire, in 1681, and died in 1754, after having begun in 1733 the periodical work, which not only gave a new turn to works of this kind, but preserves its reputation at present undiminished in the ranks of its competitors.

CAVEDONE, Jacomo (Biog.) an Italian painter, whose misfortunes are said to have overpowered his intellects. He died in 1660, aged 80, in a stable, and in distress.

CAVENDISH, Sir William (Hist.) of the family of Cavendish mentioned under Heraldry, chief justice of the King's Bench, was beheaded by some rebels in an insurrection in 1382. 5 Ric. II.

CAVENDISH, Thomas, a younger brother of the same family, sailed from Plymouth in 1586, and after circumnavigating the globe, returned thither in 1588. He again embarked after an interval of three years in pursuit of new adventures; but being prevented by tempestuous weather from going farther than the Straits of Magellan, he died of grief in 1592 on the coast of Brasil.

CAVENDISH, Sir William, gentleman usher to cardinal Wolsey, remained faithful to his master in his disgrace, notwithstanding which he continued in favour with Henry VIII, and also with his successors Edward VI and Mary, in whose reign he died in 1557, aged about 52.

CAVENDISH, Sir William, vide Newcastle.

CAVENDISH, William, vide Devonshire.

CAVENDISH, Charles, a younger brother of the earl of Devonshire, distinguished himself as a loyal and brave subject in behalf of his king during the rebellion, in which, after performing many gallant exploits, he perished fighting nobly near Grantham in 1642-3. Cromwell was in this engagement, and boasted not a little the advantage he gained on this occasion.

CAVENDISH, Lord Frederic, third son of the third duke of Devonshire, who rose to the rank of field-marshal, was taken prisoner at the action of St. Cas in 1758, but was afterwards allowed to return to his country on his parole.

CAVENDISH, Lord John, fourth son of the third duke of Devonshire, was distinguished as the friend of lord Rockingham, and the opponent of lord North. He was twice chancellor of the Exchequer, and died in 1796.

CAVENDISH (Her.) the name of an illustrious family which at present enjoys the highest rank in the peerage. They derive their name from Cavendish, in Suffolk, of which sir John Cavendish, the chief justice before-mentioned, obtained the lordship in 1366; but they are supposed to derive their descent from Robert de Gernon, a famous Norman, who attended William the Conqueror into this realm in 1066. William Cavendish, the second son of sir William Cavendish before-mentioned under History, was created in 1605 (3 Jac. I) baron Cavendish of Hardwick, co. Derby, and earl of Devonshire in 1618. William, the third earl of Devonshire, was created in 1694 marquis of Hartington and duke of Devonshire, which titles are at present enjoyed by the family. [Vide Devonshire] Sir William Cavendish, nephew of the first earl of Devonshire, enjoyed, among other titles, that of duke of Newcastle, which are now extinct. [Vide Newcastle] Another branch of this family enjoys the title of baron Waterpark, co. Cork, to which sir Richard Cavendish, bart. succeeded in right of his mother Sarah, only daughter and heiress of Richard Bradshaw, esq. a descendant of the president Bradshaw, who was created baroness Waterpark in 1792.

CAVENDISH, Hon. Henry (Biog.) son of lord Charles Cavendish, and nephew to the third duke of Devonshire, devoted his whole life to the pursuits of science, and died in 1810, at the age of 79, leaving the greatest sum in funded property which perhaps any person ever possessed, amounting to 1,200,000*l.* His writings on subjects of science appeared in the Philosophical Transactions of 1766, and subsequent years.

CAULET, Francis Stephen de (Ecc.) an ecclesiastic of Toulouse, was born in 1610, and died in 1680 bishop of Pamiers, after having displayed the utmost zeal in restoring the discipline of the church within his diocese, and of asserting its rights in the disposal of vacant benefices, &c. which he maintained did not belong to the king.

CAULIAC, Gui de (Biog.) a French physician to the popes Clement VI and Urban V, was the author of 'Chirurgie Tractatus Septem cum Antidotario,' Venet. 1490, and often since; also translated into most modern languages, and into English in 1541.

CEPHALONIA (Geog.) or Cephalonia, the first in size, though the second in rank, of the islands forming the Ionian republic, is situated in the Mediterranean, opposite the entrance of the Gulf of Lepanto, between Santa Matra, Zante, and the coasts of Morea and Livadia. Lon. 20° E., lat. 38° N. It is divided into seven parts, namely, Argostoli, Liscari, Finca, Erisso, Pillaro, Samo, and Lucato.

History of Cephalonia.

This island, which was called by the ancients Cephalena, [vide Cephalena] was under the marquis of Tocchis, who was prince of Achaia and the adjacent isles; but it was transferred in 1224 to Venice, from whom it was taken by the Turks in 1479, but retaken by the Venetians in 1499, who in 1595 built the fortress of Asso in the city of Cephalonia. They ceded this island to the French by the peace of Campo Formio, in 1797; but being taken from this latter power in 1799, it was formed, with the other islands, into an independent commonwealth, which was in 1810 subject to France, but is now under the protection of Great Britain.

Ecclesiastical History of Cephalonia.

Cephalonia was erected by the marquis of Tocchis into a bishop's see, suffragan of the archbishopric of Corfu. Most of the inhabitants are of the Greek church.

CEPHALUS (Myth.) Κεφαλος, son of Deioneus, king of Thessaly, married Procris, the daughter of Erechtheus, king of Athens, and was killed by accident with an arrow, as he pursued him from jealousy in the woods. Hesiod. Theog. v. 986; Apollod. 1. 3; Hygin. Fab. 189; Ovid. Met. 1. 7.

CHALONS, sur Marne (Geog.) a town of Champagne, a late province of France, and capital of the department of the Marne, situated on the Marne, 40 miles S. W. Verdun, and 103 E. Paris. Lon. 4° 22' E. lat. 48° 51' N.

History of Chalons.

This ancient town, the Catalannum of the Romans, is said to have been the theatre of the battle fought by Marovian, king of the French, Attilus, a general of the Romans, and Theodorus, king of the Visigoths, against Attila in 451, when they defeated him; but some think that, instead of Campi Catallunici, the Plains of Chalons, it ought to be read Campi Secalunici, the Plains of Soulogus.

Ecclesiastical History.

Chalons was, before the revolution, a bishop's see suffragan of Rheims, of which S. Memius was its most ancient prelate. A council was held here in 1115, and some synods in 1559, 1641, &c.

CHARLES (Hist.) a name common to several kings and emperors.

Emperors of this Name.

CHARLES I. more commonly called Charlemagne, or Charles the Great, king of France, and first emperor of the West, was born in a castle called Ingelheim, near Mentz, in 742, succeeded his father, Pepin the Short, in 768, to the crown of France; and after making himself master of all Germany and Italy, he was crowned at Rome emperor of the West, by Leo III, in 800, and died in 814, after reigning 47 years over France; leaving his eldest son Louis to be emperor and king, and bestowing Italy on Bernard, the illegitimate son of his son Pepin. He was buried in the cathedral of Aix la Chapelle. [Vide Plate II]

CHARLES II, surnamed the Bald, king of France and emperor of the West, was born in 823, succeeded his father Louis le Debonnaire in 840. He was elected emperor in 875, and obtained a great victory over his brother Lotharius at Fontenay; but finding himself afterwards unable to withstand his enemies, he fled into Italy, where he was poisoned in 873, by one of his servants. The effigies of this and the following princes are given, as in the annexed figures.

CHARLES III, surnamed the Gross, or Fat, the third son of Louis, king of Germany, was elected emperor in 881; but owing to his incapacity he was driven from the throne, and died of grief in 888. Arnold, his nephew, was chosen in his stead.

CHARLES IV, grandson of the emperor Henry VII, had so great a respect for the church, that he was called the Emperor of Priests. He died in 1378, after a reign of 32 years. His reign is famous for the golden bull, enacted at Nuremberg in 1356. His sons Wenceslaus and Sigismund were successively emperors.

CHARLES V, eldest son of Philip, archduke of Austria, was born at Ghent in 1500, proclaimed king of Spain in 1516, succeeded his grandfather Maximilian in 1518, as emperor of Germany; and after having been engaged in long and successful warfare with the Moors, he resigned his imperial crown to his brother Ferdinand, and the kingdom of Spain to his son Philip in 1555, and died in 1558. [Vide Plate II]

CHARLES VI, fifth son of the emperor Leopold, was proclaimed in 1703 king of Spain, under the title of Charles III; succeeded Joseph as emperor of Germany in 1711; obtained in 1714 the kingdoms of Naples and Sardinia, the Netherlands, and Milan and Mantua, in exchange for Spain, which had been contested with him by Philip V, and died in 1740, aged 55, being the 16th and last emperor of the house of Austria in the male line. He was succeeded by Charles Albert, of Bavaria.

CHARLES VII, son of Maximilian Emanuel, elector of Bavaria, succeeded as elector in 1726, and on the death of Charles VI he protested against the Pragmatic Sanction, and the rights of Maria Theresa to the imperial throne; but although aided by the French and Bavarians, he did not retain more than the empty title of emperor when he died in 1745, aged 48.

Kings and Princes of France.

CHARLES I, or Charlemagne, emperor and king of France. [Vide Charles I]

CHARLES II, emperor and king of France. [Vide Charles II]

CHARLES III, surnamed the Simple, was born in 879, succeeded to the throne of France in 893; but being unequal to the government, his enemies wrested some provinces from him, and afterwards making him a prisoner, deprived him of his crown, which he had worn for 30 years. He died after a seven years' captivity, and abandoned by all his friends, in 929.

CHARLES IV, surnamed the Fair, succeeded to the throne of France on the death of his brother Philip the Tall in 1322, and died 1328, after having been engaged in a war with Edward II, of England.

CHARLES V, surnamed the Wise and Eloquent, son of king John, was born in 1337, succeeded his father in 1364, and died after a reign of 16 years, in which he repaired the losses that France had sustained by the English in the time of his father.

CHARLES VI, surnamed the Well-beloved, son of Charles V, was born in 1368, succeeded his father in 1384, and died in 1422, after an unhappy reign, in which his country, torn by intestine divisions, was overrun by the victorious English, and he was deprived of his crown by the victor, Henry V, of England. He was succeeded by his son Charles VII.

CHARLES VII, surnamed the Victorious, was born in 1402, succeeded his father Charles V in 1422, and died of hunger in the 39th year of his reign, in which, by his vigour, combined with the ardour which the Maid of Orleans inspired into her countrymen, he wrested from the English all their conquests, except the town of Calais. He was succeeded by his son Louis XI.

CHARLES VIII, surnamed the Affable, son of Louis XI, was born in 1470, succeeded his father in 1483, and died after a reign of 14 years, in which he conquered Florence, Rome, Capua, and Naples, and caused himself to be proclaimed emperor of Constantinople; but was soon after compelled to cut his way through a combined army four times as strong as his own, in order to return to his own dominions.

CHARLES IX, second son of Henry II, was born in 1550, succeeded his brother, Francis II, in 1551, and died after a reign of more than 13 years, which was stained by the cruel massacre of St. Bartholomew, plotted and executed by his mother Catherine de Medicis and her counsellors; but too much approved of by himself, to leave him guiltless of the bloody deed.

CHARLES, eldest son of Charlemagne, was made king of eastern France, by the will of his father, in 806, and died in 811, without children.

CHARLES of France, son of Charles the Bald, was consecrated king of Aquitania in 855, and died of a wound in his head in 866.

CHARLES, third son of the emperor Lotharius I, succeeded his father as king of Provence and a part of Burgundy in 855, and died in 863.

Kings of Naples.

CHARLES I, son of Louis VIII, of France, was born in 1220, and invested with the kingdoms of Naples and Sicily by the popes Urban IV and Clement IV, in 1266 and 1285. During his reign the massacre of the French took place in Sicily, which is well known by the name of the Sicilian Vespers.

CHARLES II, surnamed the Lame, succeeded his father Charles I, in 1289, and died in 1309, at the age of 63, after a reign of 25 years. He was the founder of many monasteries and churches.

CHARLES III, surnamed the Little, grandson of John, duke de Duras, and great grandson of Charles II, succeeded to the crown of Naples and Sicily, after having put to death Joan I, of Naples, in 1380, and going into Hungary to take possession of that kingdom also, he was killed at Buda in 1386, through the intrigues of Isabella, widow of Lewis, king of Hungary.

CHARLES IV, son of Charles, count of Anjou, was king, not only of Naples and Sicily, but also of Jerusalem, and died in 1481, after a year's reign.

Kings of Sweden.

CHARLES, a name common to twelve kings of Sweden, the first six of whom are known in history only by name.

CHARLES VII, surnamed Suercherson, succeeded Eric the Holy in 1160, and was killed by Eric IX, after a reign of eight years.

CHARLES VIII, surnamed Canutson, was raised to the throne in 1448, and died in 1470, after a troublesome reign, in which he was once driven from his throne by Christiern II, king of Denmark, but was afterwards restored.

CHARLES IX, Duke of Sudermania, and son of Gustavus I, was born in 1550, succeeded in 1604 in the place of his uncle Sigismund, who was obliged to take flight, and died in 1611, after having made war on the Polanders, Danes, and Swedes.

CHARLES-GUSTAVUS X, son of John Casimir, Count Palatine of the Rhine, was born in 1622, succeeded queen Christina, his cousin, in 1654, and died after a reign of six years, in which he was engaged in a war with Poland, and afterwards with Denmark.

CHARLES XI, son of the preceding, was born in 1655, succeeded his father in 1660, and died in 1697, at the age of 42; his mother having governed with much wisdom during his minority. Just before his death he was acknowledged as mediator by the powers who concluded the peace of Ryswick.

CHARLES XII, son of Charles XI, was born in 1662, crowned at the age of 15, and was killed in 1718, by a cannon-ball, at the siege of Frederickshall, in Norway, after a warlike and adventurous reign, in which he strove to imitate Alexander by the number of his conquests, and the display of fearless valour. [Vide Plate V]

Kings of Hungary.

CHARLES I, surnamed Martel, son of Charles II, of Naples, was born in 1272, succeeded to the throne of Hungary in 1290, and died in 1297, or, according to the historians of Hungary, in 1301. Bonfin. de Reb. Hung.

CHARLES III, surnamed the Little, the same as Charles III, of Naples, before-mentioned.

Kings of Navarre.

CHARLES I, the same as Charles IV, of France.

CHARLES II, surnamed the Bad, son of Philip, count of Evreux, and Joan, daughter of Louis X, of France, was crowned king of Navarre in 1350, and was burnt to death in 1387, at the age of 55, after having attempted to poison Charles V, of France, and the other princes of his house; and also committed other enormities.

CHARLES III, king of Navarre, surnamed the Noble, was born in 1361, succeeded his father Charles II, in 1387, and died in 1425, after having contributed to the happiness of his subjects by his justice and other virtues.

Kings of Spain.

CHARLES I, the same as the emperor Charles V.

CHARLES II, was born in 1661, succeeded his father, Philip IV, in 1665, and died in 1700, at the age of 32, without issue. In him ended the eldest male branch of the house of Austria, reigning in Spain.

CHARLES III, the title assumed by the emperor Charles VI.

CHARLES IV, succeeded his brother Ferdinand VI on the throne of Spain in 1759, when he exchanged Sicily for the Spanish dominions, and died in 1789, after an unsuccessful reign.

Kings of England.

CHARLES I, surnamed the Martyr, son of James I, and Anne of Denmark, was born at Drumferline in 1600, succeeded his father in 1625, and perished on the scaffold, after a long and desperate struggle to maintain his rights, by the hands of his rebellious and hypocritical subjects in 1648. He is the reputed author of the Icon Basilike, although many are pleased to dispute this point. [Vide Plate IV]

CHARLES II, son of the preceding, was born in 1630, and after sharing the misfortunes of his father and family, was by the voice of the nation, which had recovered from its phrenzy, recalled to the throne in 1660, and died in 1685, after a reign marked by levity, licentiousness, and discontent. [Vide Plate IV]

Princes of this Name.

CHARLES, Martel, son of Pepin, surnamed Heristal, signalized himself as a successful warrior against the Saxons, Germans, Bavarians, &c., but more especially against the Saracens in Aquitania. He died in 741, at the age of 50 or 55, after a life spent entirely in martial exploits. His son Pepin was the first king of the Carolingian race.

CHARLES of France, Duke of Lorraine, and eldest son of Louis IV, was born in 953. He laid claim to the crown of France at the death of his nephew Louis V, but being defeated and taken prisoner, he died in 994.

CHARLES of France, Count of Valois, &c., eldest son of Philip the Bold, obtained the title of Defender of the Church, on account of the assistance which he rendered to the popes Martin IV, and Boniface VIII. He was also successfully employed against the English, and died in 1325.

CHARLES II, Duke of Lorraine, was engaged in warfare with Prussia and France, in the former of which he took the duke of Lithuania prisoner, and died in 1430.

CHARLES, Duke of Orleans, was taken prisoner at the battle of Agincourt, and detained in England for 25 years.

CHARLES, Duke of Burgundy, surnamed the Bold, the Warrior, and the Rash, son of Philip the Good, was born in 1433. After conquering the people of Liege and Ghent, he carried his arms against Louis XI of France, whom he took prisoner. The tide of success afterwards turned against him, and he was slain in 1477, as he was endeavouring to escape from the siege of Nancy.

CHARLES II, cardinal of Bourbon, archbishop and count of Lyons, second son of Charles I, duke of Bourbon, took this latter title after the death of his brother John II, and held a council at Lyons for terminating the schism of Felix V against the pope Nicholas V. He was also employed by Louis XI in his most confidential concerns, and died in 1488.

CHARLES III, Duke of Savoy, succeeded his brother Philibert II in 1504, and died of grief at the age of 66, after a reign of 49 years, at seeing his country the theatre of the war which was carried on between Francis I his nephew, and Charles V his father-in-law.

CHARLES III, Duke of Bourbon, constable of France, &c., a warlike and enterprising prince, fought valiantly the battles of Louis XII.

CHARLES of Bourbon, eldest son of Francis, of Bourbon, duke of Vendome, and constable of France, signalized himself in the service of Louis XII, and Francis I.

CHARLES of Bourbon, son of the preceding, cardinal of Bourbon, archbishop of Rouen, &c., was born in 1523, and entering deeply into the intrigues of the Guise faction, he was by them set up as king, under the title of Charles X, in order to exclude his nephew Henry IV, and died in 1590.

His works, consisting of prose and verse, were published by the elder Du Clesme, in 4to. 1617. Some have ascribed to him the 'Chroniques de S. Denys,' 3 vols. fol. Paris, 1493.

CHARYBDIS (Myth.) Χάρυβδις, a rapacious woman, who is fabled to have stolen the oxen of Hercules, and, being struck with thunder by Jupiter, was changed into the whirlpool of that name. [Vide Charybdis, under Geography]

CHARYBDIS (Geog.) a dangerous whirlpool on the coast of Sicily, frequently mentioned by the ancients, but of which there are no vestiges at present by which its exact situation may be marked; it is supposed, however, to be the Capo Faro. It was opposite to a rock named Scylla, on the coast of Italy, whence the proverb, "Incidit in Scyllam cupiens vitare Charybdein," to show that in our eagerness to avoid one evil, we often fall into a greater.

Hom. Odys. l. 12: v. 235a

CHASLES, Gregory de (Biog.) a French writer of the 18th century, who was the author of, 1. 'Les Illustres Françaises,' 3 vols. 12mo. and 4 vols. 12mo. Utrecht, 1737. 2. 'Journal d'un Voyage fait aux Indes Orientales sur l'Escadre de M. du Quesne,' &c. 3 vols. 12mo. Rouen, 1721. The 'Dictionnaire de Justice,' written by Francis James Chasles, has been improperly ascribed to him.

CHASSENEUZ, Bartholomew (Biog.) king's advocate at Autun, died in 1542, leaving, among other things, 'A Commentary on the Customs of Burgundy,' which has gone through many editions; the last was published by President Bouhier, in 2 vols. fol.

CHASTEL, John (Hist.) son of Peter Chastel, a linen-draper of Paris, attempted to assassinate Henry IV., in 1594, but being taken in the act, after having wounded the king in the lip, he was condemned and executed as a traitor, and the Jesuits, who were the instigators, were banished the kingdom.

CHASTELAIN, George (Biog.) or Castellanus, a Flemish gentleman, who died in 1475, was the author of an historical account in verse of all that had passed in his time.

CHASTELAIN, Claude, a French ecclesiastic, died in 1712, leaving 'Martyrologie Universelle,' 4to. Paris, 1709, besides an Hagiographical Dictionary, which was inserted by Menage in his Etymologies of the French tongue.

CHASTELET, Gabriel Emilie de Breteuil, Marchioness (Biog.) was born in 1706, and died in 1749, leaving, among other things, a translation of Newton's Principia, with a Commentary, in 4 vols. 4to.

CHASTELLUX, Francis John Marquis de (Hist.) a field-marshal of France, who rose by his merit to that rank in the army, died in 1788, leaving a high reputation as an author. Among his works are, 1. 'Essai sur l'Union de la Poesie et de la Musique,' 1765. 2. 'De la Felicité Publique,' which was translated into English, in 2 vols. 8vo. 3. 'Voyage dans l'Amérique,' which was immediately translated into English, 2 vols. 8vo.

CHATEL, Tannegui du (Hist.) a commander, of the noble family of Du Chatel, in Brittany; defeated Ladislaus, who had usurped the throne of Naples, and, after distinguishing himself at the battle of Agincourt, he died in 1449.

CHATEL, Tannegui du, nephew of the preceding, distinguished himself by his attachment and fidelity to his sovereign, Charles VII, whom he attended in his last moments when he was killed in battle, in 1477, and buried him at his own expence. Thuanus falsely attributes this act to his uncle, who had been dead some time. Thuan. Hist. l. 26.

CHATEL, vide Chastel.

CHATEL, Peter du (Ecc.) in Latin Castellanus, a French prelate who died in 1552, was first made bishop of Tulle by his patron, Francis I, and afterwards bishop of Maçon, in which character he distinguished himself in his day.

CHATELARD, N. du (Hist.) a gentleman of Dauphiny, who, being passionately fond of Mary, queen of Scots, concealed himself in her chamber as she was returning to Scotland after the death of her husband; for which imprudence he was put to death, although it is said he was countenanced by the queen.

CHATELET, Erard du (Hist.) of the noble family of Du Chatelet, descended in the male line from the dukes of Lorraine, was the eldest son of Anthony du Chatelet, marquis de Trichateau. He distinguished himself as a valiant soldier in the service of Louis XIII and XIV, as also in that of his relation, the duke of Lorraine; and died in 1684.

CHATELET, Paul Hai, Seigneur du, of the family of Hai, in Brittany, and a descendant from the earls of Carlisle, was at first only an advocate-general in the parliament of Rennes, but was afterwards employed by Louis XIII in many important missions, and died in 1636, leaving several works in prose and verse, particularly, 1. 'Observations sur la Vie et la Condemnation du Maréchal de Marillac,' 4to. Paris, 1633. 2. 'L'Histoire de Bertrand de Guesclin,' &c. fol. 1666, and 4to. 1693.

CHATELIERAULT, Duke of (Her.) the title conferred on James Hamilton, second earl of Arran. [Vide Hamilton]

CHATHAM, William Pitt, earl of (Hist.) a celebrated statesman, was born in 1708, educated at Eton and Trinity College, Oxford; elected into parliament for Old Sarum, in 1735, where he stood foremost in the ranks of opposition against Walpole; was afterwards, at different times, a member of the administration; but, on his retirement from office, he again appeared among the oppositionists. In April, of 1778, he fell in a fit into the arms of those who were near him, as he was going to reply to the speech of the duke of Richmond; and died in the May following. [Vide Plate IX]

CHATHAM, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles at present enjoyed by the family of Pitt [vide Pitt], which was conferred in 1766 on William Pitt, above-mentioned. The title, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Pitt, earl of Chatham, and viscount Pitt.

Arms. Sable, a fess chequy or and azure, between three bezants.

Crest. On a wreath, a crane close proper, beaked and membered or, holding his dexter foot upon an anchor erect or; which crest was assigned to William, the first earl of Chatham, and his descendants lawfully begotten, by grant dated October 24th, 1761.

Supporters. On the dexter side a lion guardant, charged on the breast with an acorn, slipt and leaved, proper; on the sinister, a buck proper, attired or; plain collared and chained sable.

Motto. "Benigno numine."

CHATILLON (Hist.) an ancient and illustrious family, which derives its name from Chatillon sur Marne.

CHATILLON, Renaud de, prince of Antioch, signalized himself in the Holy Land, whither he accompanied Louis the Younger in 1147. He obtained some advantages over the Infidels; but, being taken prisoner in 1153 by the sultan of Aleppo, he suffered a long imprisonment, and afterwards falling into the hands of Saladin, he was beheaded in 1186.

CHATILLON, Gaucher II, de, also attended Louis the Younger to the Holy Land, where he was killed by the Saracens with many other noblemen in 1147.

CHATILLON, Gaucher III, de, signalized himself against the Albigenes, and died in 1219.

CHATILLON, Gaucher IV, de, followed S. Louis in 1248 to the Holy Land, where he was engaged in many battles, particularly at the bloody engagement in which the king was taken prisoner. He was killed in defending a passage singly against an army of Saracens in 1251.

CHATILLON, Louis I, de, was early engaged against the English, and fell at the battle of Crecy, in 1346.

CHATILLON, Guy III, de, was sent as a plenipotentiary by Philip the Fair to conclude the peace with the ambassadors of the king of England; and, after being employed on other occasions, both civil and military, he died in 1317.

CHATILLON, Gaucher IV, de, constable of France, of another branch of the same family, signalized himself at the battle of Courtra, in 1302; contributed materially to the victory over the Flemish in 1304, at Mons-en-Puelle; was high in the confidence of Louis Hutin I; assisted at the consecration of Philip the Tall, in 1317; as also at that of Charles the Fair, in 1322; and, after successfully displaying his valour at the victory gained by Philip le Valois over the Flemish, in 1328, died, loaded with glory and honours, in 1329.

CHATILLON, John I, de, was one of the hostages given to the English for the delivery of King John.

CHATILLON, Hugh de, a commander who supported the honour of his family by his active military services, was killed at the battle of Agincourt.

CHATILLON, John de, of the same family, was constantly employed in military service, and, after having fought at the battle of Poitiers, died in 1363.

CHATILLON, Gaucher V, de, was employed both as a negotiator and a commander by Charles V, and died in 1377.

CHATRE, Claude de la (Hist.) marshal of France, was at first engaged with the party of the league, but made his peace with Henry IV, and died in 1614, aged 78, leaving, 1. 'Memoir du Voyage de M. le Duc de Guise en Italie,' &c. printed in the 'Journal de Henry III,' 8vo. 1744. 2. 'La Prise de Thionville,' 4to. 1558, &c.

CHATRE, Petre de la (Ecc.) archbishop of Bourges, was appointed to that see in 1141, and died in 1171, after having gained the esteem of Louis the Younger, as also of the popes Eugene III, Adrian IV, and Alexander III.

CHATTERTON (Her.) the name of a family of Cork, which at present enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet conferred in 1801 on sir James Chatterton, second serjeant at law, and keeper of the state papers. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Or, a lion's head erased azure, between three mullets gules.

Crest. An antelope's head erased argent, pierced through with an arrow from the back of the neck.

Motto. "Loyal a mort."

CHATTERTON, Thomas (Biog.) an English poet, was born in 1752, and was found dead in 1770, in consequence, as is supposed, of his having swallowed arsenic in water. Although he began at an early age to be a writer for bread, yet he is principally known by the poems he published as the production of one Rowley, a Bristowyan monk, which are generally supposed to have been a forgery of his own manufacture. It was once the fashion to hold this writer up to public compassion as the victim of unmerited neglect and poverty, but it is now no longer doubted that his pride, his petulance, and his want of principle, were the immediate causes of that distress which terminated in suicide.

CHAUCER, Geoffry (Biog.) a poet, styled by Dryden the Father of English Poetry, was born at London in 1328, educated first at Cambridge, and then at Oxford, studied law in the Inner Temple; and, after being in the employ of Edward, and his successor Richard, whose favour he forfeited by embracing the tenets of Wickliffe, he died in retirement at Woodstock. His poems, of which the Canterbury Tales possess the highest merit, remained for upwards of 70 years after his death in MS. The first edition is supposed to have been printed in 1474 or 1476; two editions were afterwards printed by Pynson in 1495 and 1526, containing other poems of Chaucer besides his Canterbury Tales; but Mr. Tyrwhit's edition of the latter, which was published in 5 vols. 8vo. 1775, has superseded every other. [Vide Plate XXVII]

CHAUCI (Geog.) a people of Germany, supposed to have inhabited the country now called Friesland and Bremen. Enc. German. c. 35.

CHAUFFEPIE, James George de (Biog.) a descendant of the ancient and noble family of the Calpedi of Florence, who removed into France in the reign of Francis I, was born at Leuwarden in 1702, and died in 1786. He is principally known as the continuator of Bayle's Historical Dictionary.

CHAULNES, Albert, Duc de (Biog.) a noble astronomer of Paris, was born in 1714, and died in 1769. Several of his papers are published in the volumes of the Memoirs of the Academy.

CHAUMETTE, Peter Gaspard (Hist.) son of a cobbler, who was born in 1763, was one of the revolutionary heroes who figured away at the taking of the Bastille. He was afterwards guillotined in 1794.

CHAUNCEY (Ecc.) Chancy, or Channy, Maurice, a monk of the Charter-house, London, was imprisoned in the reign of Henry VIII for refusing to own the king's supremacy, but escaped afterwards to Flanders, where he was made the prior of a new monastery which the king of Spain prepared for him and his companions, and died in 1581. Among his works is his 'Historia aliquot nostri Seculi Martyrum,' &c. 4to. Mogunt. 1550.

CHAUNCEY, Charles (Biog.) a nonconformist of Herefordshire, was born in 1592, and died in 1671, after having acted his part towards promoting the rebellion.

CHAUNCEY, Sir Henry, was born in 1632, educated at Cambridge, entered of the Middle Temple, and died in 1719, after having risen to the post of a Welch judge. He was the author of the 'Historical Antiquities of Hertfordshire,' fol. 1700.

CHAUSSE, Michael Angelo de la (Biog.) an antiquary of Paris in the last century, was the author of, 1. 'Museum Romanum,' fol. 1690; and with additions, 2 vols. fol. 1746. 2. 'Gemme Antiche Figurata,' 4to. Rome, 1700. 3. 'Aureus Constantini Nummus,' &c. 4to. Rom. 1703. 4. 'Le Pitture Antiche delle Grotte di Roma,' &c. fol. 1706.

CHAUSSEE (Biog.) vide Nivelle.

CHAUVEAU, Francis (Biog.) a painter and engraver of Paris, who died in 1676, aged 63, executed not less than 4000 pieces, as an engraver, of which 1400 were of his own

- designing. His son Rene, who followed the footsteps of his father, died in 1722, at the age of 59.

- CHEDORLAOMER (Bibl.) כדור-לומר, a king of the Elymeans, or Elamites, one of the four kings who confederated against the five kings of the Pentapolis of Sodom, who were pursued and dispersed by Abraham, A. M. 2092, A. C. 1908. Gen. xiv. 1, &c.; Usser. Annal. &c.
- CHEDWORTH, John, Lord (Her.) a title conferred on John Howe, esq. in 1741, nephew to the first viscount Howe, which became extinct at the death of the fourth lord Chedworth without issue in 1804.
- CHEFFONTAINES, Christopher (Ecc.) in Latin a Capite Fontium, an ecclesiastic, of a noble family of Brittany, was born in 1632, and died titular archbishop of Cesarea in 1595, leaving, among other things, 1. 'Confutation du Point d'Honneur,' 8vo. Paris, 1579, a treatise against duelling. 2. 'De Necessaria Theologiæ Scholasticæ Correctione,' 8vo. Paris, 1586.
- CHEKE, Sir John (Biog.) the descendant of an ancient family in the Isle of Wight, was born at Cambridge in 1514, and died, as it is said, of remorse and vexation at having been obliged to abjure Protestantism. He had left the kingdom in the reign of queen Mary; but, being taken by Philip of Spain, while residing in Brussels, he was brought to London, where he saved himself from being burnt by a public recantation. His works are, 1. 'Contra Observatores Nevilunii et de Dormientibus in Christo,' 4to. Lond. 1543; also 'De Fato,' and 'De Providentia Dei,' 1547, all translated from the homilies of St. Chrysostom. 2. 'The Hurt of Sedition,' &c. 1549 and 1576; also inserted in Holingshead's Chronicle. 3. A Latin translation of the English 'Communion Book,' printed in Bucer's 'Opuscula Anglicana.' 4. 'De Pronuntiatione Græcæ potissimum Linguae Disputationes,' &c. 8vo. Basil. 1555. 5. 'De Superstitione ad Regem Henricum,' prefixed by the author as a dedication to a Latin translation of Plutarch on Superstition. An English translation, done by W. Elstob, was published by Mr. Strype at the end of his Life of Sir John Cheke. 6. A Latin translation of Archbishop Cranmer's Book on the Lord's Supper, was also done by Sir John Cheke in 1553-7. 7. 'Leo de Apparatu Bellico,' 8vo. Basil. 1554.

born in 1688, and died in 1752, leaving: 1. 'Anatomy of the Human Body,' 8vo. 1713, 1722, 1726, 1732, and 1740; fol. 1734; and the eleventh edition in 8vo. 1771. 2. 'Treatise on the High Operation for the Stone,' 8vo. 1723. 3. 'Osteography, or Anatomy of the Bones,' fol. 1733.

CHESHIRE (Geog.) a county palatine of England.

Boundaries and Extent. It is bounded by Lancashire on the N., Flint and Denbighshire on the S. W. and N. W., Derbyshire on the E., and by Shropshire on the S., extending about 80 miles from N. to S., and upwards of 40 from E. to W., without reckoning the peninsula, which stretches into the Irish sea.

Principal Towns. Chester, the capital and a city, Macclesfield, Stockport, Nantwich, Knutsford, Congleton, Northwich, &c.

Principal Rivers. The Dee, the Weaver, and the Mersey.

History. This county, called in the Latin Cestriensis Comitatus, was first inhabited by the Cornavii, who, being subdued by the Romans, it became a part of Flavia Cæsariensis. It was erected into a county palatine by William the Conqueror, in favour of his nephew Hugh de Aulange, commonly called Hugh Lupus, who exercised a jurisdiction little short of regal authority, whence this county was invested with peculiar privileges, which it enjoyed until the reign of Henry VIII. It contains many vestiges of its Roman conquerors.

CHESNE, Joseph du (Biog.) vide Quesne.

CHESNE, Andrew du, an historian of the Isle of Bouchard, in Torraine, who was considered as the father of French history, was born in 1584, and was crushed to death by a cart in 1640 as he was going to his country house at Verrieres. His named is Latinized Duchenius, Quernaus, Quercetanus, &c.; and his principal works are, 1. 'Januarie Kalende, seu de Solemnitate Anni,' &c. 1602. 2. 'Les Figures Mystiques du riche et precieux Cabinet des Dames,' 1605. 3. A Translation of Juvenal with Notes, 1607. 4. 'Antiquitez et Recherches des Villes et Chateaux de France,' 1610, and frequently reprinted. 7. 'Histoire d'Angleterre,' 1614. 8. 'Bibliotheca Cluniacensis.' 9. 'Histoire des Papes,' fol. 1615, 1645; and again greatly enlarged by his son in 1653. 10. 'Œuvre d'Abelard,' 1616. 11. 'Histoire de la Maison de Luxembourg,' continued to the year 1557. 12. 'Histoire des Rois, Ducs, et Comtes de Bourgogne,' 1619. 13. 'Histoire Genealogique de la Maison de Chastillon sur Marne,' 1620, which was followed in 1621 by a similar History of the House of Montmorency; and in 1626, 1629, and 1631, by those of de Vergy, Burgundy, Guines, Ardres, Dreux, &c. 13. 'Historiæ Francorum Scriptores,' &c. 2 vols. fol. 1636; the third and fourth were in the press at the time of his death, which were completed by the son, who added a fifth.

CHESTER (Geog.) a city of England, and capital of the county of Cheshire, situated on the river Dee, 145 miles N. Bristol, 181 N. W. London. Lon. 3° 4' W. lat. 53° 11' N.

History of Chester.

Chester, a very ancient place, and well known to the Romans under the names of Cestria, Castra Deva, Devana, Civitas Legionum, Legio XX Victrix was so called from one of their legions, which remained there till 330. It was the place of meeting for the Britons when they elected a king; and, according to the Saxon Chronicle, the walls were repaired in 908 by Ethelfred, duke of Mercia, and Ethelfleda, his wife. Hugh Lupus, nephew to William the Conqueror, being made earl of Chester, took possession of this city, which, in the reign of king John, fell into the hands of the barons; and, during the grand rebellion, when he supported the royal cause, it was compelled to surrender in 1646.

CHESTERFIELD, Philip Stanhope, first Earl of (Hist.) distinguished himself in the royal cause during the rebellion, and died after a long confinement in 1656, aged 72.

CHESTERFIELD, Philip, second Earl of, the grandson of the preceding, was very active in forwarding the restoration of the royal family, and died at the age of 80, after having been long and high in office.

CHESTERFIELD, Philip Dormer, fourth Earl of, was born in 1694, appointed ambassador to Holland in 1728, and again in 1744 as ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary, and died in 1773. He is well known as the author of 'Letters to his Son,' which sufficiently stamped his character as a moralist. His 'Miscellaneous Works' were published in 2 vols. 4to. 1777.

CHESTERFIELD, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles at present enjoyed by the family of Stanhope, of whom mention has been made above under History, and also under that of Stanhope. [Vide Stanhope] The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Stanhope, earl of Chesterfield, and baron Stanhope, of Shelford.

Arms. Quarterly ermine and gules.

Crest. On a wreath a tower azure, with a demi-lion rampant or, issuing from the battlements, crowned ducally gules, and holding between his paws a grenade firing proper.

Supporters. Dexter, a tulbot guardant ermine; sinister a wolf ermine, both gorged with chaplets of oak proper.

CHETWODE (Her.) the name of a family seated at Chetwode, co. Bucks, long before the conquest, which at present enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1700 on sir John Chetwode.

CHETWOOD, Knightly (Ecc.) an English divine of a noble family, was born in 1652, educated at Eton and Cambridge, and died dean of Gloucester, after having been nominated to the see of Bristol just previous to the abdication of King James II. He was the author of the life of Wentworth, earl of Roscommon, preserved in the library of Cambridge, in Baker's MS. collections; also of the life of Virgil, prefixed to Dryden's translation, and some verses, &c.

CHETWOOD, William Rufus (Biog.) a bookseller, and afterwards a prompter at Drury Lane Theatre, died in 1766, leaving, 'A General History of the Stage,' and some pieces for the stage long since forgotten.

CHETWYND (Her.) the name of a family which is derived from the place of its residence in the county of Salop, whereof Adam de Chetwynd was of such distinction in those early times, as to marry Agnes, daughter of John, lord Luvel, baron of Dockinge, and lord of Munster Luvel, in Oxfordshire, and by her was father of Sir John de Chetwynd, of Chetwynd, knt.; to whom King Henry III, in the 37th year of his reign, granted free warren throughout all his demesne lands in the counties of Stafford, Salop, and Warwick. Walter Chetwynd, esq. a descendant of this family, was created in 1717 baron of Rathdowne, co. Dublin; and viscount Chetwynd, of Bearhaven, co. Kerry. The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Chetwynd, viscount Chetwynd, and baron of Rathdowne.

Arms. Argent, on a chief vert, two spears, heads erect of the field, their points embued proper.

Crest. A spear argent, embued proper, issuing out of a ducal coronet or.

Supporters. Two men in complete armour, each holding a spear, as the crest.

Motto. "A cuspidè corona."

CHETWYND, a younger branch of the above-mentioned family, enjoys at present the dignity and title of a baron, con-terred in 1795 on Sir George Chetwynd, whose arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly; first and fourth azure, a chevron between three mullets, or; second and third argent, two chevrons gules.

Crest. A goat's head erased.

CHETWYND, John (Biog.) an English divine, was born at Banwell, in Somersetshire, in 1623, and died in 1692. Besides some sermons, he was the author of 'Anthologia Historica,' 8vo. Lond. 1674; republished in 1691 under the title of 'Collections, Historical, Political, and Theological,' &c. He also edited his grandfather's, Sir John Harrington, 'Briefe Viewe of the State of the Church of England.'

CHEVALIER, Anthony Ralph le (Biog.) a protestant divine of Montchamps, in Normandy, was born in 1507, and died in 1572. He translated from the Syriac into Latin the 'Targum Hierosolymitanum;' and wrote 'Rudimenta Hebraice Linguae,' 4to. Wittemb. 1574.

CHEVERT, Francis de (Hist.) a French general of Verdun, who rose from the ranks; defended Prague after the retreat of Bellisle with obstinate bravery, which yielded to nothing but famine; contributed by his valor to the victory of Hاستenbach, in 1757; as also to that of Lauterberg; and died in 1769, aged 74.

CHEVILLIER, Andrew (Biog.) a doctor and librarian of the Sorbonne; was born of poor parents at Pontoise, in the Isle of France, in 1636, and died in 1700, leaving, 1. 'Origine de l'Imprimerie de Paris, &c.' 4to. Paris, 1694. 2. A translation, or rather paraphrase, of the 'Grand Canon de l'Eglise Grecque,' 12mo. Paris, 1699, written by Andrew of Jerusalem, archbishop of Candy.

CHEVREAU, Urban (Biog.) a scholar and courtier of Loudun, in Poitou, a province of France, was born in 1613, and died in 1701, leaving, 1. 'Le Tableau de la Fortune,' 8vo. 1651; reprinted under the title of 'Effets de la Fortune,' 8vo. 1656, a romance. 2. 'L'Histoire du Monde,' 1686, frequently reprinted; the best edition is in 8 vols. 12mo. 1717. 3. 'Œuvres Mêlées,' 2 vols. Hague, 1697.

CHEWTON, Viscount (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Waldegrave.

CHEYNE, James (Biog.) professor of the Scotch college, at Douay, in Flanders, who died in 1602, was of the ancient family of Arnage, or Arnagie, in Aberdeenshire. He wrote, 1. 'Analysis in Philosophiam Aristot.' 8vo. Duac. 1573, 1595. 2. 'De Sphæra, seu Globi Cælestis Fabrica,' ibid. 1575. 3. 'De Geographiâ, Lib. duo, 8vo. ibid. 1576. 4. "Orationes duo, de Perfecto Philosopho," &c. 8vo. ibid. 1577. 5. 'Analysis et Scholia in Aristot. Lib. XIV,' 8vo. ibid. 1578.

CHEYNE, George, a physician of a good family in Scotland, was born in 1671, and died in 1743, leaving, among his medical works, 'An Essay on the True Nature and Due Method of treating the Gout,' &c. which passed through five editions at least; and 'An Essay on Health and Long Life;' besides which, he published 'Rudimentorum Methodi Fluxionum inversæ Specimina adversus Abr. de Moivre;' 'Fluxionum Methodus inversa,' &c.; and 'Philosophical Principles of Natural Religion,' &c.

CHEYNELL, Francis (Biog.) a nonconformist, was born in 1608 at Oxford, where he was educated, and was afterwards appointed a visitor by the rebel parliament, whose cause he warmly espoused. He was ejected from his living, and died in 1665, respected by no one. He was a bitter opponent of Chillingworth, in a work entitled, 'The Rise, Growth, and Danger of Socinianism;' in answer to Chillingworth's work entitled, 'The Religion of Protestants,' &c.

CHIABRERA, Gabriello (Biog.) an Italian poet, was born in 1538, and died in 1638. His 'Lyric Poems,' 3 vols. 8vo. Roma, 1718, and 'Amadeida,' 12mo. Napoli, 1695, are particularly admired. All his works were published in 4 vols. 4to. Venice, 1781.

CHIARAMONTI, Scipio (Biog.) in Latin Claramontius, an Italian astronomer of Casena, in the province of Romagna, was born in 1565, and died in 1652, leaving, 1. 'Discorso della Cometa pognare dell' Anno 1618,' &c. 4to. Venice, 1619. 2. 'Anti-Tycho,' &c. 4to. Venet. 1621. 3. Bonon. 1653, &c. &c.

CHIARI, Joseph (Biog.) an historical painter of Rome, who died in 1727, aged 73.

CHICHELY, Henry (Ecc.) archbishop of Canterbury, and founder of All Souls College, Oxford, was born about 1362, at Higham-Ferrars, in Northamptonshire; educated at Winchester and New College, Oxford; promoted to the bishopric of St. David's by Henry IV in 1408; succeeded Arundel as archbishop of Canterbury; and, after having been employed on the most important missions to Rome by both Henry IV and V, he died in 1443. The foundation of All Souls College, for which the stone was laid in 1437, was not the first instance of his munificent spirit. In 1422 he founded a collegiate church at his native place, in Higham-Ferrars, which fell into the sacrilegious and rapacious hands of Henry VIII and his minions. [Vide Plate XII]

CHICHESTER, Sir Arthur (Hist.) of the ancient and noble family mentioned under Heraldry, was early employed in arms, in the reign of queen Elizabeth; and so distinguished himself against the refractory Irish, by his zeal, fidelity, valour, and prudence, that he was made lord deputy of Ireland, and raised to the peerage, as mentioned hereafter. He died in 1624, after having been sent as ambassador to the Palatinate.

CHICHESTER, Edward, first Viscount, and next brother of the preceding, distinguished himself by his fidelity to his sovereign in the time of the rebellion; but died in 1648, after having rendered him essential service in Ireland.

CHICHESTER, Sir John, Knt., youngest brother of the two preceding, and surnamed the Younger, because his eldest brother was also named sir John, was governor of Carrickfergus in 1597; when, falling into an ambuscade, which was laid by Macdonnell, afterwards earl of Antrim, he was taken and beheaded on a stone.

CHICHESTER, Arthur, vide Donegal.

CHICHESTER (Ecc.) alias Cirencester, Robert de, dean of Salisbury, of the above-mentioned family, was consecrated bishop of Exeter in 1128, and died in 1150, after having bestowed much money in rebuilding and adorning his cathedral.

CHICHESTER, Earl of (Her.) a title conferred on sir Francis Leigh, in 1644, who dying without male issue in 1653, the title became extinct.

CHICHESTER, Earl of, a title revived in the Pelham family, [vide Pelham] which was conferred in 1801 on Thomas, lord Pelham. The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Pelham, earl of Chichester, and baron Pelham, of Stanmer, and baronet.

Arms. Quarterly, in the first and fourth three pelicans argent for Pelham; in the second and third two buckles.
Crest. On a wreath a peacock in his pride argent, and sometimes a buckle argent, in memory of sir John Pelham's making John, king of France, prisoner.

Supporters. On the dexter side a horse mousedun; on the sinister a bear proper; each collared or, gorged with a belt argent, strap pendant, buckle and studs or.

Motto. "Vincit amor patriæ."

CHICHESTER, the name of a noble family, which was originally written Cirencester, from Cirencester, in Gloucestershire, and was one of the most eminent in the county of Devon for its estate, employment, and alliances, having flourished for many generations at South Poole, not far from Kingsbridge, where their ancient habitation was. The first of the name to be met with is Wallerande Cirencester, said to be descended from a brother of Robert de Cirencester above-mentioned, from whom descended sir Arthur Chichester, who in 1612 was created baron Chichester, of Belfast, co. Antrim. He dying without issue, this title was revived in 1625 in the person of his lordship's next brother, sir Edward Chichester, to which the superior title of viscount Chichester, of Carrickfergus, co. Antrim, was added. His son Arthur was created in 1647 earl of the county of Donegal. Arthur, the fifth earl, was created in 1798 an English peer, by the title of baron Fisherwick, co. Stafford; and further advanced in 1791, in the Irish peerage, to the dignity and title of marquis of Donegal, and earl of Belfast. [Vide Donegal]

CHICHESTER, the elder branch of the above-mentioned family, whose ancestor, sir John Chichester, was the eldest brother of sir Arthur Chichester, first viscount Chichester before-mentioned. His grandson, sir John Chichester, was created a baronet in 1641. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Chequy or and gules, a chief vaire.

Crest. A heron rising with an eel in his beak proper.

CHICHESTER (Geog.) a city of England, and capital of the county of Sussex, situated on the river Levant, 36 m. S. E. Winchester, 61 S. S. E. London. Lon. 0° 47' W., Lat. 50° 50' N. It is entirely surrounded by walls.

History of Chichester.

Chichester, called in Latin Cicestria, was a Roman station, and in its neighbourhood there is still a Roman camp. Several antiquities have been discovered at different places, particularly the remains of what was supposed to be the foundation of a temple. After suffering much from the assaults of foreign enemies, it is said to have been rebuilt by Cissa, the second Saxon king, who made it his residence; but was almost totally destroyed by fire in 1180. It was erected into a bishop's see about the eighth century; and the cathedral, such as it is now, was rebuilt by Seffrid, its bishop, in 1199.

CHICOYNEAU, Francis (Biog.) first physician to the French king, was born at Montpellier in 1672, and died in 1752, leaving, among other things, 'Observations et Réflexions touchant la Nature, les Evénemens et le Traitement de la Peste de Marseille,' 12mo. Paris, 1721; in which he maintained that the plague was not infectious. His son Aimé Francis Chicoyneau distinguished himself in the science of botany, and died in 1740, at the age of 38, professor and chancellor of the University of Montpellier, being the fifth of his family who had enjoyed that dignity.

CHIFFLET, John James (Biog.) a physician of Besançon, was born in 1588, and died in 1660. He wrote, among other things, 'Vindiciæ Hispanicæ.' His Latin works were published in fol. Antv. 1659.

CHIFFLET, Julius, a son of the preceding, published, 1. 'Histoire du Chevalier Jaq. de Lalain,' 4to. Brussels, 1634. 2. 'Généalogie de la Maison de Rye,' fol. 1644. 3. 'Généalogie de la Maison de Tassis,' fol. 1645. 4. 'Historia Velleris Aurei,' 4to. Antv. 1652.

CHIFFLET, Peter Francis, a Jesuit, who died in 1682, at the age of 92, wrote, among other things, 'L'Histoire de l'Abbaye de Tournus.'

CHILD, William (Biog.) a doctor of music, and a native of Bristol, died in 1697, at the age of 90, after having been organist of Windsor Chapel for 65 years. His works are, 'Psalms for Three Voices,' &c. 1639; 'Catches, Rounds, and Canons,' published in Hinton's 'Catch that Catch Can,' 1652; 'Divine Anthems,' &c.; but his principal pieces are his Services and full Anthems, in Boyce's Collection.

CHILDEBERT (Hist.) a name common to some kings of France.

CHILDEBERT I, the third son of Clovis I, by St. Clotilda, succeeded in 511 to that share of his father's dominions which was named the kingdom of Paris, and died in 558, after having been at frequent variance with his brothers Thierry and Clotarius. Procop. de Bell. Goth. l. 1; Greg. Tur. l. 3; Aimon. l. 2.

CHILDEBERT II, son of Sigebert, succeeded his father in Austrasia in 575, and died by poison in 596, after having joined Burgundy, Orleans, and part of Paris, to his dominions. Gregor. Tur. l. 5; Paul. Diacon. Hist. de Longob. l. 3; Aimon. l. 5, &c.; Apud. Du Chesne.

CHILDEBERT III, brother of Clovis III, and son of Thierry, surnamed the Just, succeeded his brother in 695, and died in 711, at the age of 28; during which time Pepin the Fat had administered the government in his name.

CHILDEBERT, son of Grimoald, Mayor of the Palace in Austrasia, attempted to get possession of the throne of Sigebert; but was taken and put to death by Clovis II, in 650. Aimon. l. 4.

CHILDEBRAND (Hist.) son of Pepin the Fat, and brother of Charles Martel, was often employed in the command of the armies under his brother. He is supposed to be the founder of the third race of French kings, who commenced to reign in the person of Hugh Capet.

CHILDERIC (Hist.) or Chilperic, a name common to some kings of France.

CHILDERIC I, succeeded his father Meroveus in 456, and died in 481, after having been banished and restored, when he enlarged his dominions by conquest. The effigy of this and the following princes are given, as in the annexed figures.

CHILDERIC II, younger son of Clovis II, was made king of Austrasia in 660, and succeeded his brother Clotarius III, as king of Burgundy and Neustria in 670. He was popular while he suffered himself to be guided by Leger, bishop of Autun; but falling afterwards into excesses, he was assassinated in 668, by one Bodillon, whom he had caused to be cruelly scourged. Daniel. Hist. de France; Mexeraï, &c.

CHILDERIC III, surnamed the Idiot, son of Childeric II, was the last king of France of the first race, who was raised to the throne by Pepin, the son of Charles Martel, and being soon after deposed by the same powerful minister, was confined in a monastery, where he died in 742. Hist. Franc. Script.; Apud. Du Chen.

CHILDREY, Joshua (Biog.) a divine and natural philosopher, was born in 1623, educated at Oxford, from which he was driven by the rebels, and died in 1670, leaving, 1. 'Indago Astrologica,' 4to. 1652. 2. 'Syzygiasticon Instaurum, 8vo. Lond. 1653. 3. 'Britannia Baccanica,' &c.

CHILLINGWORTH, William (Biog.) an English divine and controversialist, son of William Chillingworth, mayor of Oxford, was born in 1602; admitted a scholar of Trinity College in 1618; elected fellow in 1628, after having taken his degrees in the regular way; and died in 1644. He was a steady loyalist, having fought and suffered in the cause of the king; but unsettled in his religious opinions, having at one period embraced the Romish faith, which he afterwards left to return to that of the church of England. His principal work was 'The Religion of Protestants a Safe Way to Salvation,' &c., two editions of which were published within five months, the first in fol. Oxford, 1638, and the second in London; it was afterwards reprinted in 1664, 1674, 1684, 1704, 1719, the ninth in 1727, and the tenth in 1742; besides an abridgment in 4to. It is worthy of observation, that this book got him the reputation of being a Socinian, among the outrageous opponents to the Romish church.

CHILMEAD, Edward (Biog.) a classic and mathematician of Stow, in Gloucestershire, was educated at Oxford, from which he was driven by the rebels, and died in 1653, leaving, 1. 'Catalogus MSS. Græcorum in Bibl. Bodl.' 1636. 2. A translation from the French of Ferrard, of 'A Treatise on Love,' 8vo. 1640; also of Guffarel's 'Curiositates Inaudite;' and Campanella's Discourse touching the Spanish Monarchy, 4to. Lond. 1659. 'Hue's Treatise of the Globes,' ibid. 1639 and 1659; and Modena's 'History of the Rites, &c. of the Jews.' 3. 'De Musica Antiqua Græca,' printed at the end of the Oxford edition of Aratus, in 1672; besides Annotations on three Odes of Dionysius, and a Latin version of John Malala's 'Chronographia,' 8vo. Oxon. 1691.

CHILO (Biog.) a Spartan philosopher, who was ranked among the seven wise men of Greece, is said to have died of excessive joy on his son's obtaining the victory at the Olympic games, A. C. 597. Diog. Laert. l. 1; A. Gell. l. 1; Plin. l. 7; Auson. Lud. Sept. Sap.

CHILPERIC (Hist.) the name of two French kings.

CHILPERIC I, son of Clotaire I, succeeded as king of Soissons in 561, and was murdered in 584, as he was returning from hunting, by his mistress Fredegunde, as was suspected, who was also supposed to have murdered his wife Galsonde. Gregor. Tur. l. 5; Aimon. l. 3; Fredegarius, Sigebert, &c.

CHILPERIC II, son of Childeric II, succeeded Dagobert III, in 715, and died after a reign of five years, in which he had been more than once beaten by Charles Martel. His effigy is given, as in the annexed figure.

CHILPERIC, son of Gondicaire, succeeded his father as king of Burgundy in 456; but his brother Gondeband revolting against him, put him and his wife, with his two sons, to death.

CHIMÆRA (Myth.) a celebrated monster, sprung from Echidna and Typhon, which vomited flames, having three heads, namely, one of a lion, one of a goat, and one of a dragon. Its breast was also that of a lion, its middle that of a goat, and its tail that of a dragon. Ovid. Met. l. 9.

Quoque Chimæra jugo mediis in partibus hæcum, Pectus at ora læ, caudam serpentis habebat.

Virg. Æn. l. 6.

— Flammisque armata Chimæra.

Whence he is called by Euripides τρίσωμος, and by Horace triformis. Bellerophon is said to have killed him mounted on the horse Pegasus. The origin of this fable is explained by the circumstance of the burning mountain of Lycia, named Chimæra; the top of which was the resort of lions; the middle, which was fruitful, abounded in goats; and the bottom, which was marshy, with serpents. Bellerophon is said to have conquered the Chimæra, because he first made his habitation on that mountain. Hom. Il. l. 6; Hesiod. Theogn. v. 322; Euripid. in Jon.; Apollod. l. 1; Horat. l. 2, &c.; Tibull. l. 3, el. 4; Strab. l. 11; Scyl. in Perip.; Plin. l. 2; Lucræ. l. 5.

CHIMÆRA (Numis.) this monster is represented on medals, as may be seen under the head of Bellerophon.

CHINA (Geog.) an extensive empire in the south-east of Asia.

Boundary and Extent. It is bounded on the E. and S. by the ocean, on the W. by Thibet, and on the N. by Mongolia; and is situated between the 20th and 41st degree of north latitude, and the 101st and 122d of east longitude; comprehending 1260 geographical miles in length from north to south, and 1050 in breadth from east to west.

Provinces and Chief Towns. The whole kingdom of China is divided into fifteen provinces or governments, namely, six northern and nine southern. The northern, according to the rank which they assign to them, are Pekin, Kansai, Xensai, Xantung, Honan, and Sughuen, which the Tartars comprehend under the name of Catai. The nine southern provinces are Hunguang, Nanking, Chekiang, Kiangsi, Fokien, Quantung, Quangsi, Jungan, and Queicheu, which are comprehended under the general name of Mangin. Among its principal towns are Pekin, the present capital, Nanking or Nanguing, the former royal residence, and Canton, its principal place of commerce.

Rivers and Lakes. China has very fine rivers, the two principal of which are the Kiang and the Hoan. The principal lakes are the Poyang, which is 250 m. in circumference, the Ton-ging, which is 200 m., the Hongtsai, and Kaoycou, &c.; besides several canals, one of which, called the Grand Canal, is said to surpass any of the kind in the whole world.

Islands and Mountains. Among the numerous islands on the S. and E. coasts of China, the principal are the islands of Formosa, Lieutchien, and Hainau. China is not a mountainous country; but there are several ridges which seem to be continuations of the immense chains of mountains that cross the centre of Asia; the principal of these is the ridge called by some Ottocara, which separates China from Tartary.

History of China.

China is distinguished by Ptolemy under the name of Sinarum regio, and by the inhabitants of Cochin-China and Siam it is called Cin, whence its modern name is derived. The Chinese empire is very ancient, but by no means of the antiquity which they pretend to give it. Its first founder, according to the general agreement of historians, was Fohi, who began to reign upwards of 2000 years before the birth of our Saviour. He was succeeded by seven others, who were of no particular family; the succeeding emperors are divided into 22 families, the names of which, together with the number of emperors, and duration of their reign collectively, are exhibited in the following table:

CHIOS (Numis.) many medals of this island are extant, bearing for the most part the figure of the sphinx, the common symbol, as in the annexed cut; to which is frequently added, the prow, or some part of a ship, to denote its maritime situation; a bunch of grapes, or a vine leaf, or a vessel, to denote its abundance of vines.

CHIRAC, Peter (Biog.) a French physician of Conques, in Languedoc, was born in 1650, and died in 1732. His Discours and Consultations are printed with those of Silva,

CHIRON (Myth.) one of the centaurs, son of Philyra and Saturn, who taught the heroes of antiquity many useful arts, as medicine and music.

Hom. Il. l. 11, v. 831.

Ὁν Χείρων ἰδὲ δαΐδανος κενναύδαν.

Pindar also gives him the epithets σώφρων, prudent, and βαθύφρων, profound or cunning. He was killed by Hercules with a poisoned arrow, and transported among the constellations under the name of Sagittarius. Herod. in Scut.; Apollod. l. 2; Ovid. Met. l. 2; Senec. in Thyest.; Paus. l. 3, &c.

CHIRON (Numis.) the instructor of Apollo, is known by the figure of a centaur and a lyre.

CHISAMO (Geog.) a town on the north coast of the island of Candia, the ancient Cisamus or Cysamus, the walls of which are still standing.

CHISHULL, Edmund (Biog.) a divine and antiquary of Eyworth, in Bedfordshire, who was educated at Oxford, and died in 1733, published among other things, 1. 'Inscriptio Sigæe Antiquissima,' &c. fol. 1721. 2. 'Notarum ad Inscriptionem Sigæam Appendicula,' &c. fol. 3. 'Dissertatio de Nummis quibusdam à Smyrnæis in Medicorum Honorem percussis,' 1724. 4. CHURCHILL, John, vide Marlborough.

CHURCHILL, George, third son of Sir Winstan, was born in 1663, and died in 1710, an admiral of the Blue, after having fought bravely in the service of king William.

CHURCHILL, Charles, fourth son of Sir Winstan, assisted at the battle of Lauden, in 1693, against king James II, and took his nephew, the duke of Berwick, prisoner. He died in 1714, after having been constantly in the service of king William.

CHURCHILL (Her.) an ancient and noble family, so denominated from the lordship of Churchill, co. Somersetshire, which was formerly written Curehill, Cherhill, Churchill, &c. The patriarch of this family was Gitto de Leon, of a noble family in Normandy, who lived in 1055; his son, Wandel de Leon, was lord of Courcil; whose son, Roger de Courcil, came over with William the Conqueror, and was rewarded with the lordship of Churchill among other lands. From him descended Sir Winstan Churchill, before-mentioned, whose eldest surviving son was John Churchill, the celebrated duke of Marlborough [vide Marlborough], who was created, in 1682, lord Churchill, of Eyemouth, co. Berwick, in Scotland; in 1685 baron Churchill, of Sandridge, co. Herts; in 1689 earl of Marlborough; in 1702 marquis of Blandford, and duke of Marlborough. He dying without male issue the titles devolved on the Spencer family [vide Spencer], by the marriage of lady Anne, his second daughter, with Charles Spencer, earl of Sunderland. In 1807 George, the third duke of Marlborough, obtained authority by royal sign manual to take and use the surname of Churchill in addition to, and after that of, Spencer. [Vide Marlborough]

CHURCHILL, Lord, the title which was conferred on Francis Almarick Spencer, second son of George, third duke of Marlborough, who was created in 1815 baron Churchill, of Whichcote, co. Oxford. The arms of this branch of the family are the same as those of the duke of Marlborough, with the proper difference.

CHURCHILL, Charles (Biog.) the poet, son of a clergyman, was born in Westminster in 1731, and died in 1764. Among his works, which now enter into the collections of the English Poets, his 'Rosciad;' 'The Prophecy of Fame;' 'The Apology;' 'Epistle to Hogarth;' 'Night and the Ghost;' &c. are the principal. [Vide Plate XXIX]

CHYNDONAX (Hist.) high-priest and chief of the Druids among the ancient Gauls, whose tomb was discovered in 1598 in the country of Poupet, near Dijon, with the inscription

Μίθρας ἐν ὀργάνῳ, γῶμα τὸ σῶμα καλύπτει Χυνδὼναστος
ἱερῶν ἀρχηγῶ, Δύσσειβης ἀπείχου, λύσις κόνιν ὀρώσει.

i. e. in the grove of Mithra this tomb covers the body of the high-priest Chyndonax: begone profane, the liberating gods protect my ashes. Gab. Simeon. Antiq. de la Limagne.

CHURCH-YARD, Thomas (Biog.) a poet of the 16th century, who wrote, among other things, the 'Legende of Jane Shore,' and the 'Worthiness of Wales,' 8vo. 1580, an edition of which was published in 1776.

CHYTRÆUS, David (Biog.) a Lutheran divine of Ingelsing, was born in 1530, and died in 1600, leaving, among other things, 'Chronologia Historie Herodoti et Thucydidis,' 8vo. Argentorat. 1563; and 'Chronicon Anni 1593,' &c. An edition of his whole works was printed in 2 vols. fol. Hanov. 1604.

CIACONIUS (Biog.) or Chaco Alphonsus, a Dominican and titular patriarch of Alexandria, was born at Bacea, in Andalusia, in 1540, and died about 1599 or 1601. Among his works are, 1. 'Historia utriusque Belli Dacici,' &c. fol. 1616. 2. 'Vite et Gesta Romanorum Pontificum et Cardinalium,' which, with the continuation, was printed in 4 vols. fol. Rom. 1676; the sequel down to Clement XII was published by Marie Guarnacci, 2 vols. fol. 1751. 3. 'Bibliotheca Scriptorum ad Annum 1583,' fol. Par. 1731, and Amst. 1732.

CIACONIUS, Peter, brother to the preceding, was born at Toledo in 1525, and died in 1581. He was employed by Gregory XIII in correcting the calendar, and also in revising an edition of the Bible; besides which he wrote 'De Triclinio Romano,' which, with the Treatises of Ursinus and Mercurialis, was published in 12mo. Amst. 1689; also inserted in Grævius' Thesaurus.

CIAMPINI, John Justin (Biog.) an antiquary of Rome, was born in 1633, and died in 1698, leaving, 1. 'Conjecturae de Perpetuo Azymorum usu,' &c. 4to. 1688. 2. 'Vetera Monumenta,' &c. 2 vols. fol. 1690, 1699. 3. 'Synopsis Historica de Sacris Edificiis a Constantino Magno Constructis,' fol. 1693, &c.

CIASLAS (Hist.) or Seislas, the 16th king of Dalmatia, who, being defeated and taken prisoner by the widow of an Hungarian general named Ladislaus, whom he had previously slain, he was put in chains after having his ears and nose cut off, about the year 860.

CIBBER (Biog.) or Cibert, Gabriel Caius, a native of Flensburg, in Holstein, and a statuary, came to England at the time of the restoration, and having married the daughter of William Colley, esq. of an ancient family of Glaiston, in Rutland, had by her Colley Cibber, the subject of the next article. He died in 1700, at the age of 70, leaving, among his works, the Two Figures of Melancholy, and Raving Madness, formerly before the front of Bethlehem Hospital

CICERO, Colley, a post-humous, and son of the preceding, was born in Southampton-street, London, in 1671, and died in 1757. The best edition of his works, which consist mostly of plays, is that of 1760, in 5 vols. 12mo.

CICERO, Theophilus, son of the above, was born in 1703, and lost his life in 1757 on the coast of Scotland, where the vessel was shipwrecked in which he was going to Ireland. He was an actor, and also a writer of some dramatic pieces, besides the share which he is said to have had in the 'Lives of the Poets,' 5 vols. 12mo.

CICERO, Susanna Maria, wife of the preceding, and an actress, died in 1766, leaving a high professional reputation.

CIBYRA (Geog.) now Burun, a town of Phrygia. Cic. in Verr. 4, c. 14; Horat. l. 1, ep. 6.

CICEREIUS, C. (Hist.) a secretary to Scipio Africanus, who, as prætor, obtained a triumph over the Corsicans. Liv. l. 41, &c.

CICERO, M. Tullius (Hist.) the son of a Roman knight of Arpinum, was lineally descended from the ancient kings of Sabine, who, after passing through the several offices of the state in regular succession, was elected consul U. C. 691. Sil. l. 8.

*Tullius erat aptat in agmina turmas
Regia progenies, et Tullio sanguis ab alto.*

Catull. de eo, carm. 49.

*Disertissime Romuli nepotum,
Quot sunt, quotque fuisse, Marce Tulli.*

Martial. l. 10, ep. 19.

*Hoc, quod secula, posterique possint
Arpinis quoque comparare chartis.*

During his consulship he suppressed the conspiracy of Catiline, for which he was styled the Father of his Country; but his enemies afterwards prevailed against him; Clodius first procured his exile, and, on his return, he fell a victim to the personal animosity of M. Anthony, who caused him to be assassinated as he was flying to Caieta, when, putting his head out of his litter, it was severed from his body by Herennius, in the 63d year of his age, A. C. 43. His head and right hand were carried to Rome, and hung upon the rostrum; and so implacable was the animosity of the triumvir and his wife, Fulvia, that the latter tore the tongue out of the orator's mouth, and pierced it with a gold bodkin repeatedly.

Juv. Sat. 10.

*Eloquium ac fumam Demosthenis aut Ciceronis
Incipit optare, &c.*

*Eloquio, sed uterque perit orator. Utrumque
Largus et exundans leto dedit ingenii fons.
Ingenio manus est, et cervix cæsa.—*

The talents of Cicero, as an orator, a statesman, and a writer, were so conspicuous that, had he possessed any one of them singly, he would have been entitled to hold the first rank among, not only his cotemporaries, but all who have ever claimed distinction in the world. His works have been the admiration of all ages, and his style the standard of pure Latinity. [Vide Plate XXXI] Among the numerous editions of his works complete, the most valuable are that of Verburgius, 2 vols. fol. Amst. 1724; that of Olivet, 9 vols. 4to. Genev. 1758; and the Oxford edition, 10 vols. 4to. 1782. C. Nep. in Attic.; Senec. Suasor. 6; Plin. l. 7; Quintil. l. 10; Plut. in Vit.; Appian.; Florus; Dio. Cassius; Eutropius, &c.

CICERO, Marcus, son of the preceding, was taken by Augustus as his colleague in the consulship, notwithstanding that he had fought at the battle of Pharsalia on the side of Pompey; but he disgraced himself and his father by his vices, particularly that of drunkenness, in which he boasted of excelling Anthony.

CICERO, Quintus, the brother of the orator, was Caesar's lieutenant in Gaul, and præconsul of Asia for three years; but, being proscribed, with his son, at the same time as his brother, he offered himself to the sword of his assassins, who were sent to dispatch him, and perished with his son, who had attempted to conceal his retreat. Plut. in Cic.

CICONES (Myth.) a people of Thrace, near the Hebrus, whom Ulysses is said to have conquered on his return from Troy. The Bacchanalians, among this people, bore Orpheus to pieces for his obscenity.

Virg. Georg. l. 4.

He is a knight of the garter and thistle, admiral of the red, and ranger of Bushy Park. His royal highness's arms are the same as those of the prince of Wales, with the omission of the scutcheon of pretence in the fourth quarter, and the label differenced.

CLARENDON, Edward Hyde, Earl of (Hist.) chancellor of England, and descended from an ancient family in Wiltshire, was born at Dinton, in Wiltshire, in 1608, educated at Magdalen Hall, Oxford, where he took his bachelor's degree in 1625, and afterwards studied for the bar; but engaging early in politics, he adhered to the king, when the country broke out in open rebellion, and at the Restoration was raised to the dignity of Lord Chancellor. In this situation he drew enemies upon himself, and became so unpopular that he found it needful to go into voluntary exile, in order to avoid an impeachment, and died at Rouen in 1673. Besides the 'History of the Rebellion,' which was written during the usurpation, in his retirement in the Isle of Jersey, he composed some other pieces, theological as well as political.

CLARENDON, Henry, Earl of, eldest son of the preceding, also took an active part in the troubles of the times; but, at the Revolution in 1688 he refused to transfer his allegiance to king William, and died in retirement in 1709. His 'State Letters,' during his government of Ireland, and his Diary for the Years 1687, 1688, 1689, and 1690, were printed in 2 vols. 4to. 1763, from the Clarendon press in Oxford.

CLARENDON, Thomas Villiers, Earl of, second son of William, earl of Jersey, was several years minister in the reign of George II, at the courts of Dresden, Vienna, and Berlin, and died in 1718, after having been constantly in the service of kings George II and III.

CLARENDON, Earl of (Her.) a title conferred on sir Edward Hyde before-mentioned, who was created lord Hyde in 1660, and earl of Clarendon in 1661. The title became extinct in 1753, at the death of the fourth earl; but has since been revived in the person of Thomas Villiers above-mentioned, who by marriage was allied to the chancellor's family [Vide Hyde and Villiers]; the titles, arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Titles. Villiers, earl of Clarendon, lord Hyde, of Hindon, (and a count in the kingdom of Prussia.)

Arms. Argent, on a cross gules, five esculop shells or, with a crescent for difference.

Crest. On a wreath a lion rampant argent, ducally crowned or.

Supporters. Two eagles sable, ducally crowned or; each charged on the breast with a cross argent.

Motto. "Fidei coticula crux."

CLARGES (Her.) the name of a family who came from the province of Hainault to England in the time of Edward IV, of which was John de Clarges. His descendant, Sir Walter Clarges, was created a baronet in 1674. Their arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Barry of ten argent and azure, on a canton sable, a ram's head couped of the first, armed with four horns or.

Crest. In a ducal coronet or, a ram's head as in the arms.

CLARIDGE, Richard (Biog.) a writer who, after having been educated at Oxford, turned first baptist and then quaker, and died in 1723. He wrote some controversial tracts, chiefly relating to the profession in which he died.

CLARINA, Eyre Massey, Lord (Hist.) younger brother of Hugh, lord Massey, entered early into the army, and died in 1804, after a life of active and honourable service.

CLARINA, Lord (Her.) a title conferred in 1800 on Eyre Massey above-mentioned for his long services.

CLARIUS (Ecc.) or Clario Isidorus, a prelate was born at the castle of Chiara, near Brescia, in 1495; was made archbishop of Fuligno by Paul III; and died in 1555, after having appeared with distinction at the council of Trent. He left 'Scholia in Biblia,' fol. Venet. 1654; and 'Scholia in N. Test.' 8vo. 1544: besides some Latin Sermons, and some Letters; which latter, with his 'Opuscula,' were published in 4to. Mutin. 1705.

CLARKE, Sir William (Hist.) of the second family mentioned under Heraldry, entered early into the army, in which he obtained a very high degree of reputation, particularly in India, where he was commandant of the British forces at Goa. He died at Seringapatam in 1808.

CLARKE (Her.) the name of a family of Salford, co. Warwick, which, being possessed of Woodchurch, in Kent, about the time of the Conquest, was thence denominated; but adopted the name of Clarke about the time of Henry III, in consequence of a marriage with an heiress of that family; from whom descended Sir Simon Clarke, created a baronet in 1617. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Gules, three swords erected in pale argent; hilts or. Crest 1. A hand couped to the wrist proper, holding a sword as in the arms.

Crest 2. Party per pale, fleur de lis argent and sable.

CLARKE, of Cresses Green-House, near Cork, the name of a family which at present enjoys the dignity and title of baronet, conferred in 1804 on Sir William Clarke, above-mentioned; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Argent, on a bend gules, cottised azure, an eastern crown or, between two swans passant argent, between three pellets.

Crest. On a stump of a tree proper, a lark with wings expanded proper, with two ears of wheat in his beak or.

CLARKE, Samuel (Biog.) an orientalist, of Brackley, in Northamptonshire, was born in 1623; educated at Oxford, where he was baccalaureate; and died in 1669; leaving, 1. 'Varie Lectiones et Observationes in Chaldaicam Paraphrasim,' inserted in the 6th vol. of the Polyglott Bible. 2. 'Scientia Metrica et Rhythmica, seu Tractatus de Prosodia Arabica,' &c. 8vo. Oxon. 1661; besides the share he took in Walton's Polyglott Bible, by correcting the Hebrew text, Chaldee paraphrase, and the Persian gospels; which last he translated into Latin.

CLARKE, Samuel, a nonconformist, of Woolston, in Warwickshire, died in 1682, leaving, among other things, 1. 'The Marrow of Ecclesiastical History,' 1650; which, together with a second part, was republished in 1654; but the best edition is said to be in fol. 1675. 2. 'A General Martyrology,' fol. 1651; to which he added, in 1632, 'An English Martyrology.' 3. 'The Lives of sundry Eminent Persons,' &c. fol. 1683. The son of this Samuel Clarke was also a nonconformist, who wrote 'Annotations on the Bible,' fol. 1690; and a grandson of his, of the same name, was the author of 'Scripture Promises;' a popular work among those of his own persuasion.

CLARKE, Alured, an English divine, was born in 1696, and educated at Cambridge; and is entitled to notice as the founder of the sick hospital at Winchester, which was the first of the kind in England. His son, Charles Clarke, esq. was appointed one of the Barons of the Exchequer, and died in 1750 of an infectious disorder caught at the Old Bailey Sessions.

CLARKE, Jeremiah, an English organist and composer of church music, who put an end to his existence in 1707, in consequence of a desperate passion for a lady of a rank far superior to his own. His anthems are highly esteemed.

CLARKE, Samuel, an English divine, of Norwich, was born in 1675, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1729. He was a great controversialist, and among his writings of this description, 'The Scripture Doctrine of the Trinity' is the principal, which gave rise to many pamphlets on the subject, and was censured by the Lower House of Convocation. He likewise published some sermons on the 'Being and Attributes of God,' which were justly liable to objections; but he was more harmlessly employed in editing 'Caesar's Commentaries, and the Iliad of Homer,' the latter of which has become a general school book.

CLARKE, William, a divine and antiquary, of Hughmon Abbey, in Shropshire, was born in 1696, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1771. His principal work was, 'The Connexion of the Roman, Saxon, and English Coins,' &c. The son of this gentleman, Edward Clarke, who died in 1786, was also a clergyman, and author of a copy of Greek Hexameters on the Death of Frederick, prince of Wales; published in the 'Luctus Academiæ Cantabrigiensi,' 1751. His grandsons, the Rev. James Stanier Clarke, the biographer of Nelson; and the Rev. Edward Daniel Clarke, the traveller; have fully maintained the literary reputation of their family.

CLARKSON, David (Biog.) a nonconformist, of Bradford, in Yorkshire, was born in 1622, educated at Cambridge, ejected from his living of Mortlake, in Surrey, in 1662, and died in 1686. Besides a volume of Sermons, in fol. he wrote 'No Evidences of Diocesan Episcopacy in the Primitive Times,' 4to. 1681, in answer to Dr. Stillingfleet; and another on the same subject, entitled 'Primitive Episcopacy,' 1688; which was answered by Dr. Henry Maurice, in 1691, in his 'Defence of Diocesan Episcopacy.'

CLARUS (Geog.) or Claros, a town of Ionia, famous for an oracle of Apollo. It is said to have been built by Manto, daughter of Teresias, who fled from Thebes after it had been destroyed by the Epigoni. Strab. l. 14; Mela, l. 1; Ovid. Met. l. 1; Paus. l. 7; Serv. in Æn. l. 3.

CLASTIDIUM (Geog.) now Schiattazzo, a town of Liguria. Liv. l. 32; Strab. l. 5.

CLAUDE (Hist.) or Asnasaghet, a king of Ethiopia in the 16th century, succeeded his father. He persecuted the missionaries whom he had requested to be sent to him from Portugal; and was killed in battle against the Mahometans, in 1559.

CLAUDE of Lorraine, the first duke of Guise, displayed extraordinary valour at the battle of Marignan, against the Swiss, when he was taken from the heaps of slain covered with wounds. He was afterwards employed by Francis I on other occasions, with equal credit to himself and advantage to his sovereign; and died in 1542.

CLAUDE of Lorraine, son of the preceding, was early inured to arms, in which he acquired great glory, and was killed at the siege of Rochelle in 1573.

CLAUDE of Lorraine, son of Henry I, duke of Lorraine, was employed in the wars about religion, and died in 1657.

CLAUDE of France, queen of France, daughter of Louis XII, was married to Francis, duke d'Angoulême, and afterwards king of France. She was crowned in 1506, and died in 1514.

CLAUDE, St. (Ecc.) bishop and archbishop of Besançon, and native of Salins, in Burgundy, resigned his pastoral charge, which he had held for a number of years, and retired to a monastery, where he died in 696.

CLAUDE, Clement, bishop of Turin in the ninth century, was a great enemy to the worship of images.

CLAUDE of Lorraine (Biog.) a landscape painter, otherwise called Claude Gellér, was born in 1600, and died, as is generally supposed, in 1682, leaving the reputation of being inimitable in the branch of the art which he practised. [Vide Plate XXXV]

CLAUDE, John, a protestant clergyman, of Sauvetat, in Angoumois, was born in 1619, and died in 1687. He wrote many controversial and theological works, published by his son, in 5 vols. 12mo. Ainst. 1689.

CLAUDIA (Bibl.) a Roman lady, converted to christianity by St. Paul, 2 Tim. iv. 21; supposed to be the wife of Pudens, who is immediately named before; for Martial speaks of a Claudia, the wife of Pudens. With less probability it has been conjectured by others that this was the British lady, Claudia Rufina, mentioned under ecclesiastical history. Mart. l. 4. ep. 4.

CLAUDIA, gens (Hist.) one of the most illustrious families of Rome, which were mostly patricians, and adverse to the plebeians. This family derives its origin from Accius Claudius, a Sabine, who, when his countrymen refused to make peace with the Romans, fled to Rome, accompanied by a body of followers. He then assumed the name of Appius Claudius, and was elected into the senate. His descendants filled the post of consul twenty-eight times; of dictator five times; and of censor seven times; and obtained six triumphs and two ovations. They were distinguished by the surnames of Pulcher, Marcellus, Nero, Centho, &c., and were, with very few exceptions, determined enemies to the plebeians. [Vide Claudia and Claudius]

CLAUDIA, gens (Numis.) the medals of this family bear the head of M. Marcellus, their illustrious progenitor, [vide Plate XIII] with the inscription M. MARCELLUS COS. QUINQ.; and sometimes the triangle, the symbol of Sicily, of which he was the conqueror. Some of them bear the heads of the emperors Tiberius, Nero, and Claudius. [Vide Tiberius, &c.] Claudius, the first emperor of this name, is distinguished by his effigy [vide Plate I] on medals, bearing the inscriptions Tiberius CLAUDIUS CÆSAR AUG. GERMANICUS—TI. KAAYΔIOΣ KAIZAP TEPM. with the additions of P. M. TR. P. I—X; IMP. GERM I—XXI; COS. I—IV; P. P. &c.

Claudius Gothicus, the second emperor, is known by his effigy, as in the annexed figure; and the inscription, IMP. CÆSAR CLAUDIUS GOTHICUS—DIVO CLAUDIO GOTHICO—DIVO CLAUDIO OPTIMO, &c.

CLAUDIA, a vestal virgin who, when her father, A. Claudius Caudex, or, as Suetonius says, her brother, triumphed over the Carthaginians contrary to the will of the tribunes, ascended his chariot, and prevented them by the sacredness of her character from dragging him out. Cic. pro Cæl. c. 14; Val. Max. l. 5, c. 8. Sueton. in Tib. c. 2.

CLAUDIA, sister of P. Claudius Pulcher, being incommoded by the crowd in the streets, is said to have expressed the wish that her brother were alive to lose another battle, that the numbers of her countrymen might be diminished; for, which wish she was fined. Val. Max. l. 8; Aul. Gell. l. 10; Suet. in Tib. c. 2.

CLAUDIA, Quintia, a vestal virgin, grand-daughter of Appius Cæcus, who, being charged with incontinence, is said to have proved her innocence by drawing the vessel along which bore the statue of the goddess Cybele, after all the sailors had tried in vain. A statue was placed in the temple of Cybele to commemorate this event, which had the reputation of remaining unhurt in two fires that consumed the temple.

Sil. Ital. l. 17. v. 33.

*Hæc prisca ducens clausorum ab origine gentem

Nulla pulsa manu sonnerunt tympana dixe
Pertur pronus ratis, ventus impellere credus.*

Ovid. Fast. l. 4.

*Claudia Quinta genus Clausi refecit ab alto;
Nec facies impur nobilitate fuit.
Casta quidem; sed non et credita, rumor iniquus
Lacerat, et falsi criminis aeta rea est.*

*Claudia præclit leto celeberrima vultu;
Credita rix tandem teste pudico Dea.*

Liv. l. 29; Val. Max. l. 1, c. 8; Plin. l. 7, c. 35; Tacit. Annal. l. 4, c. 64; Suet. in Tib. c. 2.

CLAUDIA, the wife of Metellus Celer, and sister to P. Claudius, so infamous in the time of Cicero. Cic. ad Fam. l. 5, ep. 2, &c.

CLAUDIA, a step-daughter of M. Anthony, whom Augustus married, but dismissed immediately after, in consequence of a quarrel with her mother Fulvia. Sueton. in Aug.

CLAUDIA, Pulchra, a cousin of Agrippina, who was condemned on a charge of adultery, and criminal designs against Tiberius. Tac. Annal. l. 4, c. 2.

CLAUDIA, two daughters of the emperor Claudius. [Vide Antonia and Octavia]

CLAUDIA, Julia, or Claudilla, the daughter of M. Silenus, and first wife of the emperor Caligula, died a short time after their marriage in child-birth.

CLAUDIA, a daughter of Nero by Poppæa Sabina.

CLAUDIA, a niece of the emperor Claudius Gothicus, mother of the emperor Constantius Chlorus, and grand-mother of the emperor Constantine. Trebel. Poll. in Vit.

CLAUDIA, a sister of Probus, by whom he was buried. Vopis. in Vit. Prob.

CLAUDIA, Rufina (Ecc.) a British lady who lived in the first century, the wife of Aulus Rufus Pudens, who is supposed to have been a Christian. The Roman martyrology makes mention of a Pudens and Pudencianus, who suffered martyrdom about the year 140. Pila. de Script. Angl.; Baron. Annal. ann. 160.; Sur. ad Diem 19 Mai.

CLAUDIANUS (Biog.) a poet of Alexandria, in Egypt, in the age of Honorius and Arcadius, who is compared with Virgil for majesty and purity of language, as also for the melody of his numbers. The best editions of his works are that of Burnman, 2 vols. 4to. Amst. 1760; and that of Gesner, 3 vols. 8vo. Lips. 1758. August. de Civ. Dei. l. 1. c. 26.; Sidon. Apollin.; Oros. l. 7. c. 35.; Suidus; Lyl. Gyrard. de L. Poet. dial. 4.; Saalig. Poet. l. 6.

CLAUDIANUS, Mamertus, a writer of the fifth century, to whom a poem on our Saviour is ascribed; which sufficiently distinguishes him from the preceding, who was a heathen. Sidonius Apollinaris speaks in high terms of this Claudianus. Sidon. Apol. l. 4. ep. 3.; Trythem. in Cat. apud Bibl. Pat. t. 4.; Lyl. Gyr. de Lat. Poet. dial. 4.; Voss. de Poet. Lat. &c.

CLAUDIUS (Hist.) the name of an illustrious family of great antiquity [vide Claudia, gens], of which there were some emperors, and many distinguished persons. Tiberius, Caligula, and Nero, were of this family; besides those which expressly bore this name.

Emperors of this Name.

CLAUDIUS, Tiberius, vide Tiberius.

CLAUDIUS, Nero, vide Nero.

CLAUDIUS, son of Drusus and Antonia, succeeded Caligula, and was poisoned by his fourth wife, Agrippina, in the 63d year of his age, A. D. 54, after a reign of 13 years debased by vice and weakness. He was succeeded by Nero. [Vide Plate I] Tac. Annal. l. 11, &c.; Dio. l. 60.; Sueton. in Vit.

CLAUDIUS, M. Aurelius, otherwise called Claudius Gothicus, a Dalmatian by birth, and the conqueror of the Goths, &c. succeeded Gallienus, and died of the plague, after a reign of two years, A. D. 270. [Vide Claudia, gens] Vopis. in Vit.

Distinguished Persons of this Name.

CLAUDIUS, Appius, or Atius Clausus, the founder of the family of the Claudii [vide Claudia, gens], was a violent opposer to the claims of the plebeians, and rendered himself so unpopular by his haughtiness, that in his second consulship the soldiers suffered themselves to be defeated by the Volsci out of revenge to him. He died at the time that the tribunes of the people were contriving his ruin, U. C. 284. A. C. 470. Liv. l. 2. &c.

CLAUDIUS, Appius, son of the preceding, and the decemvir surnamed Gracchus, attempted most iniquitously to get Virginia, a beautiful girl, into his power, by causing his client, M. Claudius, to claim her as his slave; which scheme was frustrated by the father, Virginius, a military tribune, who, to protect his daughter's honour, just as she was going to be dragged away, stabbed her in the Roman forum. Her death was the signal for a tumult, which ended in the expulsion of the decemvirs, and the abolition of the decemvirate. Appius poisoned himself the next year, U. C. 305, A. C. 449, in order to escape the consequences of his guilt; and his pander, M. Claudius, went into exile.

CLAUDIUS, Appius, grandson of the decemvir, a Roman dictator, gained a signal victory over the Hernici, and died during his consulship with Camillus, U. C. 405, A. C. 349; after having distinguished himself by the most violent opposition to the encroachments of the plebeians. Liv. l. 4. & 6. &c.

CLAUDIUS, Appius, surnamed Cæcus, in whose consulate the Via Appia was made; and an aqueduct was constructed, which was called after him Aqua Appia. He dissuaded the Romans from making peace with king Pyrrhus; and was reckoned by Cicero among the illustrious orators. Ovid alludes to his blindness, by which he got the surname of Cæcus.

Ovid. Fast. l. 6.

*Appius est auctor; Pyrrhoque pace negat
Multum animo vidit, lumina captus erat.*

Cic. in Tusc. l. 5. c. 38. &c.; Diodor. l. 20; Liv. l. 9.

CLAUDIUS, Appius, surnamed Caudex, brother or son of the preceding, was sent out with a fleet against Hiero and the Carthaginians, in Sicily, and, after having defeated the latter, he compelled the former to sue for peace.

Sil. l. 6. v. 66.

CLAUDIUS PULCHER, P., a consul, was beaten in a naval engagement by the Carthaginians, U. C. 505; for which he was fined by the Romans. His defeat was ascribed to his contempt of the auspices. Polyb. l. 1.; Liv. Epit. l. 29.; Plin. l. 9. &c.; Sueton. in Tib. c. 2.

CLAUDIUS PULCHER, Appius, besieged Capua during his consulship, U. C. 542, and died of the wound he received. Polyb. l. 8, c. 10; Liv. l. 25, 26.

CLAUDIUS MARCELLUS, M., vide Marcellus.

CLAUDIUS NERO, C., prevented the junction between the armies of Annibal and Asdrubal, by going unobserved to meet the latter, whom he defeated and slew; and then returned to the camp of Annibal, whom he apprised of what had passed by throwing the head of Asdrubal over the trenches, U. C. 545, A. C. 207. Liv. 27.

CLAUDIUS PULCHER, C., augur and consul, triumphed over the Istrians and Ligurians, U. C. 579, A. C. 175, and died in 585, after having been sent on an embassy into Macedonia.

CLAUDIUS, Appius, a consul, who conquered the Salassi, U. C. 611, A. C. 143, Cicero designates him fervidus orator. Cic. Brut. c. 48.

CLAUDIUS PULCHER, Appius, a colleague of Cicero in the augurship, and of L. Donatius in the consulship, U. C. 700, A. C. 54, whom Dolabella accused of extortion, and thereby prevented from obtaining a triumph. He perished in the civil wars between Pompey and Cæsar, with both of whom he sided by turns. Cic. ad Fam. l. 2, &c.; Varr. de Re Rust. l. 3, c. 16; Dio. l. 40.

CLAUDIUS, P., vide Clodius.

CLAUDIUS, a robber, who plundered Judæa and Syria in such a manner that the emperor Severus set a price upon his head; after which he had the boldness to appear before the emperor with a retinue, and, having saluted him as if he were one of his tribunes, to retire without being recognised. Dio. l. 75.

CLAUDIUS, Herminianus, a Roman prefect, set over Cappadocia, who was a bitter persecutor of the Christians, and is said to have died of a loathsome disease from vermin. Tertull. ad Scap.

CLAUDIUS (Ecc.) vide Claude.

CLAUDIUS, Verus, archbishop of Vieme, who, according to Bede and Ado, was a prelate of distinguished learning and worth. He was at the council of Asles in 314.

CLAUDIUS, Quadrigarius (Biog.) an historian quoted by Livy and Paternulus.

CLAUDIUS MARIUS VICTOR, vide Victorinus.

CLAUSUS (Hist.) vide Claudia, gens.

CLAVERING (Her.) the name of an ancient family of Axwell, in Durham, which derives its descent from Rustace, a noble Norman, whose two sons came over with William the Conqueror, into England. Sir James Clavering, a descendant of this family, was created a baronet in 1661; the arms of which are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly or and gules, a bend sable.

Crest. Out of a ducal coronet or, a demi-lion issuant azure.

CLAVIGER (Myth.) or club-bearer, an epithet of Hercules. Ovid. Met. l. 15.

CLAVIUS, Christopher (Biog.) a German Jesuit and mathematician of Bamberg, was born in 1537, and died in 1612, leaving different works on mathematical subjects, which have been published in 5 vols. fol.

CLAYMOND, John (Hist.) the first president of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, and a native of Lincolnshire, died in 1537, after having presided over that college for 20 years. He left a considerable part of his property in scholarships and other benefactions to Brazen Nose, Magdalen, and Corpus Christi Colleges. His works, which are preserved in MS. in the library of Corpus, consist of commentaries on Aulus Gellius, Plautus, and Pliny.

CLAYTON, Robert (Ecc.) a descendant from the Claytons of Adlington, in Lancashire, mentioned under Heraldry, was successively bishop of Killala, Cork, and Clogher, and died in 1758, just at the moment that he was going to be called to an account for the doctrines which he had openly avowed in opposition to the Thirty-nine Articles. He left among his works, 1. 'The Chronology of the Hebrew Bible Vindicated,' &c. 4to. 1747. 2. 'An Essay on Spirit.' 3. 'A Vindication of the Histories of the Old and New Testament,' &c. 8vo. 1752, the second part in 1755. 4. 'A Journal from Grand Cairo to Mount Sinai and back again,' &c. dedicated to the Society of Antiquaries, London, 4to. and 8vo. 1753.

CLAYTON (Her.) the name of a family of Morden, in Surrey, which at present enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet first conferred in 1731 on sir William Clayton. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Argent, a cross sable, between four pellets.

Crest. In a mural crown gules, a leopard's paw erect argent, grasping a pellet.

Motto. "Virtus in actione consistit."

CLAYTON, the name of a family of Adlington, in the county of Lancaster, which derives its descent from Robert de Clayton, who came into England with William the Conqueror, and for his services received the manor of Clayton, in Lancashire. His eldest son John attended William II in 1090 against Malcolm, king of Scotland, and was slain in battle near Penrith. William, the second son of Robert, served king Stephen during his troubles, and was slain in a battle fought in 1141 near London, when Ranulph, earl of Chester, had taken possession of that city. From this family descended sir Richard Clayton, who was created a baronet in 1744, whose arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Argent, a cross engrailed sable, between four torteauxes gules.

Crest. A dexter arm and hand, with a dagger.

Motto. "Probitatem quam divitias."

CLAZOMENÆ (Geog.) now Vourla, a city of Ionia, on the coast of the Ægean Sea, which was the birth-place of Anaxagoras, and other illustrious men. Cic. Orat. l. 3, c. 34; Liv. l. 38; Strab. l. 14; Paterc. l. 1; Mela, l. 1; Plin. l. 5; Ælian. Var. Hist. l. 2.

CLEADAS (Hist.) a man of Platea, who raised tombs over those who had been killed in the battle against Mardonius. Herod. l. 9.

CLEANDER (Hist.) Κλέανδρος, the first tyrant of Gela. Arist. Polit. l. 5, c. 12.

CLEANDER, one of Alexander's officers, who killed Parmenio by the king's command; he was afterwards punished with death, for offering violence to a noble virgin. Q. Curt. l. 7.

CLEANDER, a favourite of the emperor Commodus, who was put to death, A. D. 190, for abusing his master's confidence. Herodian. l. 1; Dio.

CLEANDRIDAS (Hist.) Κλεανδρίδας, a Spartan general mentioned by Polyænus.

CLEANTHES (Biog.) a stoic philosopher of Assos, in Troas, who affected to despise riches, by which he gained much credit. He is said to have starved himself in the 90th year of his age, A. C. 240. He wrote many pieces, none of which have been preserved except his 'Hymn to Jupiter,' and a few fragments which have been published at different times, particularly by Fulvius Ursinus, for the first time in 1568; then by Henry Stephens, in his 'Poesis Philosophica,' 1573, and in Brunck's 'Analecta,' in 1776, &c. Cic. de Fin. l. 2, c. 69, &c.; Strab. l. 13; Senec. ep. 44, &c. Lactant. l. 1; August. de Civ. Dei, l. 5.

CLEARCHUS (Hist.) Κλέαρχος, a Lacedæmonian, who, being sent to Byzantium to appease the commotions of that place, exercised a sovereign authority, until he was expelled by his countrymen. He afterwards withdrew to Ionia, where he attached himself to the party of Cyrus the Younger, and at his death was one of the leaders of the 10,000; but falling into the hands of Artaxerxes, he was put to death. Xenoph. Ellen. l. 1; Diod. l. 14; Frontin. Strateg. l. 1.

CLEARCHUS, a tyrant of Heraclea, in Pontus, who was killed by Chion and Leonidas, two of Plato's pupils. Diod. l. 15; Justin. l. 16.

CLEARCHUS, another tyrant of Heraclea, who was killed, A. C. 288, by Lysimachus, king of Thrace, after a reign of 17 years. Diodor. l. 20; Athen. l. 3.

CLEARCHUS, Flavius, a Roman consul, and colleague of Richomer, U. C. 1137.

CLEARCHUS (Biog.) a disciple of Aristotle, who wrote a treatise on tactics.

CLEDONIUS (Biog.) a Roman senator and grammarian of Constantinople, who wrote a book entitled 'Commentarius in Artem utramque Donati,' published among the 'Grammatici Veteres' of Putschius, 4to. Hanov. 1605.

CLEEVE, Joseph (Biog.) a Flemish painter, who died in 1536. His pieces were chiefly 'Misers counting their Hoarded Treasures.'

CLEGHORN, George (Biog.) a physician of Edinburgh, was born in 1716, and died in 1789. He was the author of 'The Diseases of Minorca,' Lond. 1750.

CLEIVELAND, John (Biog.) vide Cleveland.

CLELAND, John (Biog.) son of colonel Cleland, the Will Honeycomb of the Spectator, was educated at Westminster, and died in 1789, at the age of 80. He was an immoral writer, but his unexceptionable works are 'The Way to Things by Words,' &c.; 'Specimens of an Etymological Vocabulary,' &c.; besides his political effusions and dramatic trifles.

CLEMENCE (Hist.) a queen of France, and daughter of Charles I, king of Hungary, was married to Louis X, surnamed Hutin, in 1315; and after his death in 1316, she spent the remainder of her life in works of piety, and died in 1328, after having founded a college at Budac.

CLEMENCET, Charles (Biog.) a Benedictine of Painblanc, in the diocese of Autun, was born in 1704, and died in 1778, leaving 'Histoire Générale du Port Royal,' 10 vols. 12mo. 1778, besides which he published with D. Durand, 'L'Art de vérifier les Dates,' 4to. 1750, and fol. 1769; and continued the 'Hist. Littéraire de la France,' with D. Clement, consisting of 12 vols. 4to.

CLEMENS, Romanus (Bibl.) or Clement, an apostolical father of the church, whose name, according to St. Paul, is in the 'Book of Life.' Philipp. iv. 3. He is also said to have been bishop of Rome, and to have died A. D. 100. Of his works nothing remains which can be deemed for a certainty genuine, except an epistle of his, which was written to the church of Corinth. The only MS copy of this epistle which exists in the world is at this time in the British Museum, bound up with the Alexandrian Bible. The first edition of it was printed at Oxford by P. Junius, Gr. and Lat. 4to. 1633; again by Dr. Fell, 1677; and 8vo. Lond. 1687, by Paul Colomesius; but the best is said to be that by Wotton, Gr. and Lat. 8vo. Cantab. 1718. The first English translation was by William Burton in 1647, and afterwards by archbishop Wake; a fourth edition of which was printed in 1737, with the epistles of the other apostolic fathers. S. Iren. l. 3; Justin. Mart. Quæst. 74; Euseb. Chron. et Hist.; Niceph. l. 5; Greg. Tur. de Glor. Mart. l. 1; Du Pin, Biblioth.

CLEMENS (Hist.) a slave of Posthumus Agrippa, who gave himself out for his master, who had been put to death by Augustus, in order that he might succeed to the empire; but the cheat being detected by Sallustius Crispus, Tiberius had him secretly despatched. Tac. Annal. l. 2.

CLEMENS, a prætorian prefect in the reign of Caligula, refused to enter into the conspiracy which terminated in the death of this prince, A. D. 41. Tac. Hist. l. 4.

CLEMENS, surnamed Arelinus, son of the preceding, was prætorian prefect in the reign of Vespasian, and was consul elect in that of Domitian, A. D. 94.

CLEMENS, Titus Flavius, nephew to the emperor Vespasian, and consul in the reign of Domitian, was put to death by the latter upon a charge, it is said, of impiety; or as others say, on account of his conversion to Christianity. Dio. l. 70; Surt. in Vit.

CLEMENS, Cassius, a senator, who, after having taken part with Pescennius, obtained his pardon from Severus, on account of his boldness. Dio. l. 74.

CLEMENS, a Greek author, who wrote the life of Alexander in verse, as quoted by Apuleius.

CLEMENS, a consul and colleague of Tertullus, U. C. 947.

CLEMENS, Titus Flavius (Ecc.) commonly called Clemens Alexandrinus, a father of the church, who flourished in the second and third centuries. The best editions of his works are that of Heinsius, Gr. and Lat. fol. Lugd. Bat. 1616; and that of Potter, Gr. and Lat. fol. Oxon. 1715.

CLEMENS, vide Clement.

CLEMENT (Ecc.) the name of several popes, or bishops of Rome.

CLEMENT I, supposed to be the same as the Clement of whom St. Paul makes mention. [Vide Clemens, under Biblical History] He had S. Evaristus for his successor.

CLEMENT II, a Saxon by birth, named Suidger, or Suiger, the first bishop of Bamberg, was afterwards elected pope in 1046, and died in 1047, when he was succeeded by Damasus II.

CLEMENT III, a Roman, succeeded Gregory VIII as pope in 1187, died in 1191, and was succeeded by Celestin III.

CLEMENT IV, a Frenchman, named Gui the Fat, or properly Gui Foucault; was elected to succeed Urban IV in 1265, died in 1266, and was succeeded by Gregory X, after a vacancy of more than two years. He was at first a soldier, afterwards a civilian, and when he took orders he was promoted to the archbishopric of Narbonne, and the dignity of cardinal.

CLEMENT V, a Frenchman, named Bertrand de Goth, was elected pope in 1305, after the death of Benedict XI, died in 1314, and was succeeded by John XXII. He made a compilation of the decrees of the council-general of Vienne, which were called after him Clementines.

CLEMENT VI, successor to Benedict XII, a native of Limosin, and named Peter Roger, died in 1352, after having sat ten years in the papal chair, when Innocent VI was elected in his place.

CLEMENT, considered by some to be anti-pope, was the son of Amadeus, count of Geneva, and being elected in 1378 in opposition to Urban VI, was acknowledged as pope by France and Spain. He died at Avignon in 1394.

CLEMENT VII, the legitimate pope, named Julius of Medicis, being the natural son of Julian of Medicis, was declared legitimate by Leo X, elected pope in 1523 on the death of Adrian VI, and died in 1534, after having compelled Henry VIII to separate from the church of Rome, by issuing a bull of excommunication against him for marrying Anne Boleyn. [Vide Plate IX] Paul III was elected in his stead.

CLEMENT VIII, a Florentine, named Hippolytus Aldobrandin, was elected in 1592 to succeed Innocent IX, and died in 1605. He at first opposed the succession of Henry IV to the throne of France, but was afterwards reconciled to him. His successor was Leo XI.

CLEMENT IX, a native of Pistoia, named Julius Rospigliosi, was elected in 1667, after the death of Alexander VII, and died of grief at the loss of Candia, which was taken by the Turks in 1669, aged 71, having Clement X for a successor.

CLEMENT X, a Roman, named John Baptist Emilius Altieri, succeeded Clement IX in 1670, died in 1676, aged 86, and was succeeded by Innocent XI.

CLEMENT XI, the son of a Roman senator named John Francis Albini, succeeded Innocent XII in 1700, died in 1721, at the age of 72, and was succeeded by Innocent XIII.

CLEMENT XII, a Roman by birth, named Laurence Corsini, succeeded Benedict XIII in 1730, died in 1740, at the age of 88, and was succeeded by Benedict XIV.

CLEMENT XIII, a Venetian, named Charles Rezzonico, succeeded Benedict XIV in 1758, and died in 1769, aged 76. The Jesuits were expelled from France, Spain, and Naples, during his pontificate.

CLEMENT XIV, son of a physician near Rimini, whose family name was John Vincent Anthony Ganganeli, was elected after Clement XIII in a tumultuous conclave, and died in 1774, not without suspicion of poison, after having, at the united solicitation of France, Spain, and Portugal, suppressed, in a formal manner, the society of the Jesuits. His name has been rendered familiar to the public by some volumes of 'Letters,' which are now universally acknowledged to be forgeries. A life of this pope was published by Caraccioli, but its veracity may be doubted, as the writer of this life was the fabricator of the letters just mentioned.

CLEMENT (Numis.) medals are extant of some of the popes of this name.

CLEMENT VII, the medals of this pope bear, on the obverse, his effigy [vide Plate X]; inscription CLEMENS VII PONT. MAX.; on the reverse of one, HODIE SALUS FACTA EST MUNDO CLEMENS VII ANNO JUBILÆI, or the year of the jubilee; on another, POST MULTA PLURIMA RESTANT, on the occasion of Rome being sacked by the imperialists, &c.

CLEMENT VIII is represented, as in the annexed figure; inscription CLEMENS VIII PONTIFEX MAXIMUS; on the reverse, where the same pope is represented kneeling before the cross, FORTITUDO MEA ET REFUGIUM; on another, FUNDATA EST SUPRA FIRMAM PETRAM, whereon the pope is represented holding a cross in one hand, and a mitre in the other; on a third, CONFREGISTI DRACONUM CAPITA, on occasion, as is supposed, of the victory over the Turks at Buda; on a fourth, HENRICUS III DEI GRATIA FRANCÆ ET NAVARRÆ REX CHRISTIANISSIMUS, with the effigy of this prince, on the occasion of his receiving absolution from the see of Rome, &c.

CLE

CLEMENT IX, the effigy of this pope is represented on his medals, as in the annexed figure, with the suitable inscription; on the reverse of one is inscribed ALIUS NON SIBI CLEMENS, with the representation of a pelican; of another, PACE POPULIS SUI A DOMINO CONCESSA, on the occasion of peace being concluded between France and Spain, &c.

CLEMENT X is depicted, as in the annexed figure, on his medals, bearing the inscription CLEMENS X PONT. MAX. ANN. II; on the reverse of some, APERIES THESAURUM TUUM. — APERUIT DOMINUS THESAURUM SUUM, &c. on celebrating the jubilee; of another, TURCARUM SIGNA A POLONIS RELATA, M.D.C.LXXVI, on the occasion of a victory gained over the Turks by the Poles, &c. Bouann. Numis. Pontif.

CLEMENT, John (Biog.) an English writer in the 16th century, who instructed the children of sir Thomas More, and left some poetry, besides a Latin version of the epistles of St. Gregory Nazianzene, and of the Homilies of Nicophorus Calixtus, &c.

CLEMENT, David, a German bibliographer, died in 1760, leaving 'Bibliothèque Curieuse, Historique, et Critique, ou Catalogue raisonné de Livres difficiles à trouver,' 9 vols. 4to. Gottingen, 1750—1760.

CLEMENT, Francis, a Benedictine of Beze, in Burgundy, was born in 1714, and died in 1793. Besides the share which he had in the collection of French historians, spoken of particularly under the head of Du Chesne, he wrote, 1. 'Nouveaux Eclaircissements sur l'Origine de Pentateuque des Samaritains.' 2. 'L'Art de verifier les Dates,' 3 vols. fol. 1780—1792, which was begun by the Benedictines Antiné, Clementet, and Durand, but completed by Clement.

CLEMENTS (Her.) the family name of the earl of Leitrim.

CLEMENTS, Viscount, a title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Leitrim.

CLENARD, Nicholas (Biog.) a native of Diest, who died in 1542, was the author of a Greek Grammar, which was revised and corrected by Vossius and other grammarians, 8vo. 1650; and a Hebrew Grammar, Louvain, 1529; besides some Letters in Latin concerning his travels, 8vo. 1606, and other works.

CLFO (Hist.) a Sicilian, and one of Alexander's flatterers. Q. Curt. l. 8, c. 5.

CLEOBIS (Myth.) Κλέβις, and Bilon, Βίλων, two youths, sons of Cydippe, the priestess of Juno, who, for want of horses, drew their mother's chariot to the temple, for which the mother entreated the goddess to reward them with the best gift that could be granted to a mortal. They went to rest, and awoke no more, implying that death is the best gift which can be bestowed on man. The Argives raised statues to them at Delphi. Herod. l. 1, c. 31; Cic. Tusc. l. 1, c. 47; Val. Max. l. 5; Plut. de Cons. ad Apol.

CLEOPATRA (Hist.) a name common to many queens of Egypt, and some other princesses.

CLEOPATRA, a niece of Attalus, and wife of Philip, king of Macedonia, after the divorce of Olympias, was forced by the latter to strangle herself after the assassination of the king, in the 11th Olympiad, A. C. 336. Diodor. l. 16; Just. l. 9; Plut. in Phil.

CLEOPATRA, a daughter of Philip, and sister of Alexander the Great, married Perdiccas, and was killed by Antigonus. Diodor. l. 17; Justin. l. 9.

CLEOPATRA, daughter of Antiochus III, king of Syria, and wife of Ptolemy V, king of Egypt, was left guardian of her infant son, Ptolemy VI; but died soon after, to the great regret of her subjects.

CLEOPATRA, daughter of the preceding, was married to her brother Ptolemy VI.

CLEOPATRA, daughter of the preceding, was married, first to her brother Ptolemy Philometer, and afterwards to her second brother Ptolemy Evergetes, by whom she was repudiated, that he might marry his niece.

CLEOPATRA, daughter of Ptolemy Philometer, was the wife of three kings of Syria, and the mother of four; namely, of Antiochus Dionysius, by her first husband Alexander Balas; of Seleucus V, and Antiochus VIII, by Demetrius Nicator, whom she caused to be put to death; and lastly, of Antiochus IX, surnamed Cyzicenus, by Antiochus Evergetes, or Sidetes. She was at length compelled, by her son Antiochus VIII, to drink the poison which she had prepared for him, in the 164th Olympiad, A. C. 120. Joseph. Antiq. Appian. de Bell. Civ.

CLEOPATRA, another daughter of Ptolemy Philometer, was married to her uncle Ptolemy Evergetes, who left her in possession of the kingdom at his death. She was killed by her favourite son Alexander, after a reign of 28 years, A. C. 90.

CLEOPATRA, daughter of Ptolemy Physcon, was married to her brother Ptolemy Lathurus; but he being obliged by his mother, the preceding Cleopatra, to put her away previous to his ascending the throne, she was afterwards married to Antiochus Cyzicenus; and was murdered by her own sister Gryphene, at the altar, whither she had taken refuge. Liv. Epit. l. 68; Joseph. Antiq. l. 13.

CLEOPATRA, the celebrated queen of Egypt, who was the daughter of Ptolemy Auletes, and successively the mistress of Caesar and Mark Anthony, destroyed herself by the bite of an asp, after the battle of Actium, A. C. 30, that she might not fall into the hands of Augustus, the victor. [Vide Plate III]

- History of Clermont.*
- It was first called Gergovia, afterwards Augustonemetum, and then Arvernum, Arverna Civitas, and Clarus Mons, and suffered much from the Goths and other barbarians; but is still a considerable town, being a bishop's see, and first suffragan of Bourges. The first bishop of Clermont was S. Austremoine, who was reckoned the apostle of the country. He was succeeded by not less than twenty-five others, who were canonised, besides several cardinals, and one who was afterwards pope, under the name of Innocent VI. Several councils were held here, namely, in 535, 549, 586, 1095, &c.
- CLESIDES (Biog.) a celebrated painter, who flourished in the 126th Olympiad, A. C. 276, in the reign of Antiochus I, is said to have painted queen Stratonice in the arms of a fisherman, in revenge for an affront he had received; but he had drawn her with so much personal beauty, that she preserved the piece and forgave the artist. Plin. l. 35.
- CLESIIUS (Ecc.) or De Closs, Bernard, a cardinal and bishop of Trente, died in 1539, at the age of 55, after having been in the service of Maximilian I and Charles V.
- CLEVELAND (Hist.) or Cleiveland, John, a noted royalist during the rebellion, who served the king both with his sword and his pen, and died in 1659. His most admired piece was 'The Rebel Scot.'
- CLEVELAND, Barbara Villiers, Duchess of, one of the first and longest of king Charles's mistresses, was first married to Palmox, earl of Castlemain, from whom she was separated in order to live with the king.

CLEVELAND, Duke of (Her.) the title enjoyed by Charles Fitzroy, son of Charles II, by the duchess of Cleveland before-mentioned. The title became extinct at the death of the second duke in 1774.

CLEVES, Anne of (Hist.) vide Anne.

CLEYN, Francis (Biog.) an artist of Rostock, who died in 1658. He was much patronized in England, and there is still extant a beautiful chamber adorned by him at Holland-house, with a ceiling in grotesque, &c.

CLIFDEN, Viscount (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Ellis, which was conferred in 1776 on James Agar, who was maternally related to that family. His son, Henry Welbore Agar, second viscount Clifden, assumed the name of Ellis on his coming to the barony of Mendip, at the death of his uncle. Their titles, arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Ellis, viscount and baron of Clifden, co. Kilkenny, lord Mendip, of Mendip, co. Somerset.

Arms. Or, on a cross sable five crescents.

Crest. On a wreath a demi-lion of the field.

Supporters. Two greyhounds, the dexter semé of crescents; the sinister semé of crosslets crusely.

Motto. "Non hæc sine numine."

CLIFFORD, Roger de (Hist.) vide De Clifford.

CLIFFORD, Thomas, Esq. grandfather to the first lord Clifford, of Chudley, and third son of Anthony Clifford, esq. of Ugbrooke, in Devonshire, was for some time employed both as a soldier and a negotiator; in which latter capacity he was sent twice as envoy to the German and Italian princes. He afterwards entered into holy orders, and occasionally preached; but never accepted any preferment in the church, and died in 1634.

CLIFFORD, Sir Thomas, Lord, grandson of the preceding, was born in 1630, and after distinguishing himself at sea, particularly against the Dutch in 1665, made himself conspicuous as a statesman, and as one of the five ministers known by the name of the Cabal, and died in 1673, after having resigned the office of Lord Treasurer.

CLIFFORD (Her.) or De Clifford, the name of a noble and ancient family, which claims a lineal descent from Richard, duke of Normandy, whose third son William, surnamed Ponce, or Poncius, was earl of Argues and Thoulouse, and came over with his nephew, William the Conqueror. His grandson was first called Fitz Richard Fitz Pont; but coming into possession of Clifford Castle, through his mother, he assumed the surname of Clifford, and his descendants have since been known by the family name of De Clifford; [vide De Clifford] in distinction from a younger branch of the same family, which bear the name of Clifford. From sir Lewis de Clifford, third son of Roger, fifth lord de Clifford, descended sir Thomas Clifford above-mentioned, who was created a baron in 1672. The title, arms, &c. of this branch of the family are as follow:

Title. Clifford, lord Clifford, of Chudley, co. Devon.

Arms. Cheque or and azure, a fess gules.

Supporters. On the dexter side a wyvern with wings expanded gules; on the sinister a monkey proper, environed about the loins and chained or.

Motto. "Semper paratus."

CLIFFORD, a branch of the same family, which at present enjoys the title and dignity of a baronet, conferred in 1815 on sir Thomas Hugh Clifford, son of Thomas, the fourth son of Hugh Clifford, the fourth baron Clifford; which honour was conferred upon him at the request of Louis XVIII, as an acknowledgment of sir Thomas's attentions and services to his Most Christian Majesty, during his long residence in this country. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. As above, a crescent for difference.

Crest. From behind a body of dark clouds a sun rising from the rays of which in chief a lily of France issuant all proper, the whole surmounted by an escroll, inscribed "Surget post nubila Phœbus."

Motto. "Semper paratus."

CLIFTON, Sir Gervase, Bart. (Hist.) of the ancient family mentioned under Heraldry, distinguished himself in the reigns of Henry VIII and Edward VI, both as a statesman and a soldier.

CLIFTON, Lord (Her.) the second title belonging to the earl of Darnley, which is borne by his lordship's eldest son. [Vide Darnley]

CLIFTON, the name of a family in the county of Nottingham, which traces its descent from Alvaredus de Clifton, a knight, who was living in the time of the Conqueror. His descendant in the 18th generation was sir Gervase Clifton above-mentioned, whose grandson, sir Gervase, was created a baronet in 1611. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Sable, semée of cinquefoils, and a lion rampant argent.

Crest. Out of a ducal coronet a demi-peacock, per pale argent and sable, his wings expanded, counterchanged.

Motto. "Tenez le droit."

CLINIAS, the father of Aratus, killed by Abantidas, A. C. 263. Plut. in Arat.

CLINIAS (Biog.) a Pythagorean philosopher and musician, A. C. 520. Plut. Symp.; M. Var. Hist. l. 14, c. 23.

CLINTON, Sir William (Hist.) afterwards created earl of Huntingdon, one of the greatest men of his age, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was constantly in the service of Edward III. who constituted him admiral of the seas in 1333. He attended the king into Scotland the same year; and distinguished himself at the famous battle of Halidown. He was governor to the young prince, and employed as ambassador to France; and, after many signal exploits, particularly the naval victory which he gained over the Spaniards near Winchelsea, he died in 1354. John, his brother, also was eminent.

CLINTON, Sir John, third Lord Clinton, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, being from his youth engaged in arms, was at the battle of Poitiers; and after distinguishing himself on several other occasions, he died in 1399.

CLINTON, William, fourth Lord Clinton, died in 1430, after having served Henry IV, V, and VI, with distinction in all the wars of that time.

CLINTON, Edward, called Fieunes, ninth Lord Clinton, first Earl of Lincoln, and Lord High Admiral of England, an eminent man, and distinguished in the sea and land service during the reigns of Henry VIII, Edward VI, Mary, and Elizabeth, died in 1584, at the age of 72, after having enjoyed the confidence of these four sovereigns.

CLINTON, Henry, second Earl of Lincoln, vide Lincoln.

CLINTON, Sir Henry, a distinguished general officer, and commander-in-chief in America during the wars in that country, evacuated Philadelphia in 1778, and took Charlestown in 1780. He wrote an account of the campaign in which he had been engaged, and died governor of Gibraltar in 1795.

CLINTON (Her.) the name of an ancient and noble family, of which mention is first made, according to Dugdale, in the person of Geoffry de Clinton, who was Lord Chamberlain and Treasurer to king Henry I. Geoffry was the son of Reinembald, or Reinembaldus, which Reinembaldus is said, by some, to have been one of the sons of William de Tancarville, earl of Tancarville and chamberlain of Normandy; by others, to be descended from the Saxon kings of Mercia. John de Clinton, a descendant of his, had a summons to Parliament in 1298, as baron Clinton, of Maxstock. William, his second son, was for his eminent services created earl of Huntingdon, [vide Huntingdon] which title became extinct at his death, without issue, in 1354. Edward, the ninth lord Clinton before-mentioned, was created earl of Lincoln in 1572; and Henry, the ninth earl, succeeded to the dignity of duke of Newcastle in 1768, on the death of Thomas Holles Pelham, duke of Newcastle. [Vide Newcastle]

CLINTON, Earl, a title conferred on Hugh Fortescue, esq. in 1746, which became extinct at his death in 1751. The barony of Clinton and Say, which was then in abeyance, had also been given him in 1721, and devolved by marriage first to the family of Rolle, [vide Rolle] and afterwards to that of Trefusis. [Vide Trefusis] The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Trefusis, lord Clinton and Say.

Arms. Argent, a chevron between three wharrow spindles sable.

History of Cologne.

Cologne was called by the Romans Colonia Ubiorum, or Colonia Agrippina, [vide Colonia] and was destroyed by Attila, in the reign of Valentinian III, about 449; and after being rebuilt by the Romans, it fell into the hands of the French, and was by Clovis united to the crown of France. In 881 it was taken and burnt by Godfrey and Siegfried, kings of the Normans; but the emperor, Otho the Great, repaired it in 950, and afterwards it was made a free imperial city, and became one of the four principal Hans Towns, which at an early period carried on a considerable trade with England. It has suffered repeatedly from the inundations of the Rhine, particularly in 1784.

Ecclesiastical History of Cologne.

Cologne was at first a bishop's see, suffragan of Treves, the first bishop of which was Mategaus, who subscribed to the council of Arles, held in 314. It was afterwards erected by S. Boniface into a metropolitan church. A synod was held here in 846, and several councils, namely, in 870, 887, 1115, 1225, &c. Gregor. Tur. l. 2; Berth. Comment. Germ.; St. Marth. Gall. Christ.

COLONNA, James, son of Otho Colonna, was high in favour with Nicholas III, by whom he was made cardinal in 1278; and also with his successors Martin V, Honorius IV, and Nicholas IV; but was embroiled with Boniface VIII, and died in 1318, after having been restored to his dignities by Benedict XI, Clement V, and John XXII. Spondan. Contin. Baron., Ciaconius, Auberi, &c.

COLONNA, John, brother of Prospero Colonna before-mentioned, was created a cardinal by Sixtus IV in 1480; but being implicated in the wars of those times, he was disgraced, not only by that pope, but also by Alexander VI. He was, however, restored to favour under Pius III and Julius II, and died in 1508. Paul. Jov. l. 3; Guichard. Hist. l. 8; Onuphrius; Ciaconius, &c.

COLONNA, Pompeo, nephew of the preceding, was the leader of an insurrection at Rome on the reported death of Julius II in 1512, but was pardoned, and created a cardinal by Leo X in 1517, and died in 1532, after having caused much trouble to Rome by his intrigues and cabals. He wrote a poem entitled 'De Laudibus Mulierum,' which remained in MS., and is mentioned by P. Labbe in his 'Bibliotheca Nova Manuscriptorum,' and also by Montfaucon in his 'Bibliotheca Bibliothecar.'

COLONNA, Mark Anthony, son of Camillo Colonna, was created cardinal by Pius IV in 1565, appointed to the archbishopric of Salerno by Pius V, and employed on different occasions by Gregory XIII, Sixtus V, and Gregory XIV. He died in 1597, leaving a treatise 'De Ecclesiasticorum reddituum Origine et Jure.'

COLONNA, Ascanio, was created cardinal in 1586 by Sixtus V, at the instance of Philip II of Spain, and died in 1608.

COLONNA, Victoria (Biog.) marchioness of Pescara, and daughter of Fabricius Colonna before-mentioned, was the authoress of a poem, in which she described the exploits of her husband, the marquis de Pescara, after his death. She died in 1541. Hilar. de Coste, Hist. des Dames Illust.

COLONNA, Jerome, a descendant of cardinal Pompeo Colonna, who devoted himself to letters, and died in 1586, at the age of 54, left a Collection and Illustration of the Fragments of Ennius.

COLONNA, or Colomna, Fabio, the botanist, of the same family. [Vide Colomna]

COLONNA, N. de, supposed by some to be of the same family, was burnt in 1726 in a fire which consumed the house where he was lodging. He wrote, 1. 'Principes de la Nature, suivant l'Opinion des Anciens Philosophes,' 2 vols. 12mo. Paris, 1725. 2. 'Histoire Naturelle de l'Univers,' 2 vols. 12mo. Paris, 1734, &c.

COLVILL, Lord, of Ochiltree, title enjoyed by Robert Colvill, natural son of sir James Colvill, of Easter Wemys, and by his successors, until the death of Robert, third lord Colvill, when the title became dormant.

COLUMBA, St. (Ecc.) the founder of a monastery at Icolmkill, and the chief agent in converting the northern Picts, was a native of Ireland, and is supposed to have been born at Gartan in the county of Tyrconnel in 521, and died at Icolmkill in 597.

COLUMBUS, Christopher (Hist.) the discoverer of America, was born in 1442; and setting sail on his first voyage in 1492, returned after discovering Cuba and Hispaniola. In his second voyage, he discovered Jamaica and other islands, and returned in 1496. He made a third voyage in 1498, and discovered Paria; but from the virulence of his enemies, he was sent back in 1500 to Spain, loaded with irons, from which he was immediately released. After revisiting the new world a fourth time, he died at Valladolid in 1506. His remains were magnificently buried by the king's command at Seville, where this short epitaph records his merits: "Columbus gave Castile and Leon a new World." [Vide Plate XV]

COLUMBUS, Bartholomen, brother to Christopher, who was ingenious in drawing of sea-charts, shared with the latter in the dangers and honours of the discovery, and died in 1514, after founding the town of St. Domingo. It is said that he was deputed by his brother to solicit the patronage of the king of England; but that, being taken captive by the pirates, his voyage was delayed, and the acceptance of the proposal, on the part of Henry VII, was anticipated by that of Ferdinand and Isabella.

COLUMBUS, Ferdinand (Biog.) son of Christopher Columbus, who devoted himself to the church and to letters, wrote an account of his father under the title of 'Historia del Amirante D. Christoval Colomb,' translated into the Italian by Alphonso de Ulloa, by which it is most known; the translation was printed at Venice in 1571 and 1674. At his death he left his library, consisting of 20,000 volumes, to the church of Seville, where it goes by the name of the Colombine Library.

COLUMBUS, Realdus, an Italian anatomist, who died in 1577, is said, in his discoveries on the circulation of the blood, to have approached very nearly to the explanation given of it by Harvey.

COUMELLA, L. Jun. Moderatus (Biog.) a native of Gades, who is supposed to have flourished in the reign of the emperor Claudius, wrote, among other works, twelve books on Agriculture, of which the tenth, on Gardening, in heroic verse, is still extant; the best edition of which is that of Gesner, 2 vols. 4to. Lips. 1735, and reprinted in 1772.

COLUMNÆ, Herculis (Geog.) the name given to two mountains, namely, Calpe and Abyla, on the coast of Spain and Africa, which were supposed to be the term of Hercules' labours; one of which (though not of the number of his 12 labours) consisted in the separating these mountains, which were originally one and the same, thus opening a communication between the Mediterranean and the Atlantic.

COLUTHUS (Biog.) a native of Lycopolis, in Egypt, who wrote a short poem on the rape of Helen, and is supposed to have flourished about the sixth century. Suidas.

COLWILL, Alexander (Biog.) a Scotch divine and poet, was born near St. Andrew's, in Fifeshire, in 1620, educated at the University of Edinburgh, and died in 1676. He was the author of the Scotch Hudibras, a satire against the Presbyterians.

COLYEAR, Walter Philip (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, made a distinguished figure in the wars carried on by king William and queen Anne; and, after attaining the rank of field-marshal, he died in 1747, at the age of 90.

COLYEAR, Sir David, vide Portmore.

COLYEAR (Her.) the name which was assumed by sir Alexander Robertson, of the family of Strowan, in Perthshire, who was created a baronet in 1677. His eldest son, sir David, was created in 1699 a peer of Scotland by the title of lord Portmore and Blackness; and farther advanced to the dignity of earl of Portmore, viscount Milsington, and lord Colyear, in 1703. [Vide Portmore]

COMAGENA (Geog.) Commagene, or Comagene, one of the five countries into which Syria was divided; the capital of which was Samosati, now Seempsat. Commagene had kings of its own from the time of Pompey to that of Vespasian. The first of these kings was Antiochus XIII, the last king of Syria, whose successors were Mithridates, Antiochus II, Mithridates II, Antiochus III, and Antiochus IV, whom Vespasian deprived of his kingdom, when it became a Roman province. Strab. l. 16; Joseph. Antiq. l. 18; Procop. de Bell. Persic. l. 1.

COMANIA (Geog.) a country of Asia, about Hyrcanum, which is now called Georgia.

COMANUS (Hist.) son of Nannus, king of the Segobrigi, who gave the Greeks of Phocis the place where they founded the city of Massilia, now Marscilles. Justin. l. 17.

COMBABUS (Hist.) a favourite of Stratonice, wife of Antiochus.

COMBEFIS, Francis (Biog.) a Dominican of Marmande, a little village on the Garonne, was born in 1605, and died in 1679. He published the works of St. Amphilochus, Methodus, and Andrew of Crete, besides several opuscula of the Greek fathers, and an addition to the 'Bibliotheca Patrum,' of a volume in fol. and his 'Ecclesiastes Græcus.' He also contributed to the edition of the Byzantine History, fol. 1685.

'Ichthyologie,' 2 vols. 4to. with a Dictionary and Bibliography, containing an account of all who had treated of that branch of natural history. 2. 'Martyrologie de la Botanie,' &c.

COMMINES (Biog.) or Comines, Philip de, in Latin Cominæus, a French historian of a noble family of Flanders, was born in 1446, and died in 1509. His 'Memoires de son Temps' have gone through numerous editions, the best of which, according to Le Long, is that of the Abbe Langlet de Fresnoy; 4 vols. 4to. Paris, 1747; it is said to have been translated into English in 1696; but the last translation was by Uvedale, in 2 vols. 8vo. 1712. [Vide Plate XXV]

COMMODIANUS (Biog.) a Christian writer of the fourth century, who composed a book in verse, entitled, 'Instructions;' which was published by M. Rigaud, in 1650; and by Mr. Davies, of Cambridge, in 1711, at the end of his edition of Minutius Felix.

COMMODUS, L. Aurelius Antoninus (Hist.) son of M. Antoninus, succeeded his father in the Roman empire, and died of poison administered by Marcia, one of his concubines, in the 31st year of his age, A. D. 192, after a reign of 13 years, which was disgraced by vices of the lowest and basest sort. Lamprid. in Vit.; Eutrop. Hist. Rom. l. 8.

COMMODOUS (Numis.) the effigy of this emperor is given, as in Plate I, on his medals, which are inscribed COMMODOUS CÆSAR AUG.—COMMODOUS CÆS. ANTONINI AUG. FIL.—L. AELIUS AURELIUS COMMODOUS et M. AURELIUS COMMODOUS ANTONINUS AUGUSTUS; sometimes with the addition of GERMANICUS; SARMATICUS; PRINCEPS JUVENTUTIS; PIUS; BRITANICUS; FELIX; COS. I—VII.; TR. POT. I—XVI.—IMP. I—VIII.; PATER PATRIÆ. He was also styled on the reverse of some medals, HERCULES ROMANUS. Medals were struck of him by most cities of Greece, Italy, and Asia. *Vaill. Numm. COMNENUS (Hist.) the name of an illustrious family of Constantinople, which attained to the imperial dignity, under the names of Alexis, Andronicus, Manuel, John, and Isaac. [Vide Alexis, &c.]

COMO (Geog.) an old town of the Austrian empire, situated on a lake of the same name, 20 m. N. Milan, 80 N. E. Turin. Lon. 9° 4' E. lat. 45° 48' N.

History of Como.

Como, called by the Romans Comum, or Novum Comum, was taken in 1123 by the archbishop of Milan, who introduced great changes there; and in the 16th century it suffered much during the wars of that time, particularly from the troops of Charles V., who punished the inhabitants for receiving the French; it is the see of a bishop, and was the birth-place of Paul Jovius.

COMO, Lagodi, or the Lake of Como, was known to the ancients by the name of Lacus Larius, the beauties of which were described by Pliny the Younger.

COMPEIGNE (Geog.) a town of France, in the country of Valois, and the modern department of the Oise, situated on the left bank of the Oise, 48 m. N. E. Paris. Lon. 2° 54' E. lat. 49° 24' N. This place is called in Latin Compendium, and is celebrated by the capture of the Maid of Orleans, who was taken in a sortie from this place. Some councils were also held here; namely, in 757, 833, 1201, 1277, 1301, 1304, and 1329.

COMPLUTUM (Geog.) a town of Hispania Tarraconensis, now Alcala.

COMPOSTELLA (Geog.) or St. Jago de Compostella, a town of Spain, capital of Galicia, 98 m. W. of Astorga, 270 N. W. Madrid. Lon. 8° 30' W. lat. 42° 52' N. This town is supposed to have been the Brigantium of the ancients; and is now an archbishop's see, and the seat of the famous order of the Knights of St. James.

COMPTON, Sir William (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was in special favour with Henry VIII. in whose service he distinguished himself in various feats of arms, and died in 1526, greatly regretted by the king.

COMPTON, Henry, Lord, grandson of the preceding, was one of the peers assigned for the trial of Mary, queen of Scots, and one of the four principal assistants at her funeral, which proceeded with great solemnity from the bishop's palace at Peterborough. He was also one of the principal commanders who besieged the earl of Essex in his house, and, after forcing him to surrender, was present with several other peers at his execution.

COMPTON, William, Lord. vide Northampton.

COMPTON, Sir Charles. second son of the right hon. Spencer, earl of Northampton, was engaged, in the 18th year of his age, in the cause of Charles I., wherein he displayed such valour and conduct as excited the admiration even of his enemies. He was active in forwarding the restoration, but died soon after by a fall from his horse, in 1661.

COMPTON, Sir William, third son of the aforesaid earl, was called by his noble father, before he was 20, to take up arms for Charles I., who gave him the command of a regiment, with which he performed considerable service; particularly at the taking of Banbury, and also in the keeping it against the united attacks of the rebels. He was afterwards one of the principal leaders in bringing about the restoration, which he did not live long to enjoy, as he died in 1663, regretted by all who knew him.

COMPTON, Sir Spencer, fourth son of the aforesaid earl, was as deeply concerned as his brothers in supporting loyalty and religion during the rebellion, and died in exile with his royal master, at Bruges, in 1659.

COMPTON, Sir Francis, was from his early youth trained to arms, which he first exercised against the rebels; and, after the restoration, he rose to the rank of lieutenant-general of the horse, and lieutenant-colonel of the royal regiment of Horse-Guards, in which post he died, in 1716, aged 87, the oldest officer in Great Britain, after having acquitted himself with honour and fidelity.

COMPTON, Henry (Ecc.) sixth and last son of the illustrious earl of Northampton before-mentioned, bore arms for some time; but afterwards entering the church, he was promoted in 1675 to the see of Oxford, and afterwards to that of London; from which he was suspended in 1686 because he did not suspend Dr. John Sharpe (afterwards archbishop of York) for preaching against his majesty's declaration. At the revolution, which he was active in promoting, he was restored to his dignity; and, after taking a prominent part in public measures during the reigns of king William and queen Anne, he died at the age of 81, in 1713. His works are, 1. A translation from the Italian of the Life of Donna Olympia Maldachini, who governed the Church during the time of Innocent X, which was from the year 1644 to 1655, Lond. 1667. 2. A translation from the French of the Jesuits' Intrigues, &c. 1669. 3. 'A Treatise of the Holy Communion' 1677. 4. Some Letters to the Clergy of the Diocese of London, concerning Baptism, &c.; also a Letter to a Clergyman in his Diocese concerning Non-resistance.

COMPTON (Her.) the name of a very ancient family, which was so called from the lordship of Compton, co. Warwick, where it had been seated before the conquest. Turchil, the son of Alwyne, cotemporary with Edward the Confessor, having taken no part in favour of Harold, was allowed by the Conqueror to keep possession of his lands, among which was the lordship of Compton. His son Osbert, who first styled himself of Compton, is reckoned the ancestor of the present family, which enjoys a peerage. Henry Compton before-mentioned, was summoned by writ in 1566, as baron Compton, of Compton; and his son William was advanced to the dignity of earl of Northampton; and Charles, the 9th earl, was in 1812 further advanced to that of marquis of Northampton. [Vide Northampton.]

COMPRON, Earl, the title borne by the eldest son of the Marquis of Northampton.

COMUM (Geog.) a colony and town of Insubria, near the lake Larium, which being rebuilt by Cæsar, was called Novum Comum, now Como. It is said by some to have been built by the Gauls under Brennus; but others attribute its origin to the Orilæi, and others to the Greeks, who had settled in the neighbouring mountains. The poet Cæcilius, to whom Catullus addressed one of his poems, was born there. Catull. Carm. 35.

*Poeta tenero, meo sodali

CONCA, Sebastian (Biog.) an artist of Gaeta, was born in 1676, and died in 1764, leaving a high reputation in his day.

CONCANEN, Matthew (Biog.) a miscellaneous writer of Ireland, who died in 1747, contributed to the 'British and London Journal,' and also to a paper called the 'Speculatist,' in which he abused lord Bolingbroke and Pope, and for that obtained a place in the Dunciad.

CONDAMINE, Charles Maria de la (Biog.) a traveller, was born at Paris in 1701, and died in 1744, leaving, 1. 'Distance of the Tropics,' London, 1744. 2. 'Brief Relation of a Voyage to the Interior of South America,' 8vo. 1745. 4. 'Journal of the Voyage made by Order of the King to the Equator,' &c. 2 vols. 4to. 1751, 1752. 5. 'Travels through Italy,' 1762.

CONDE, Louis, first Prince of (Hist.) son of Charles of Bourbon, distinguished himself at the battle of St. Quintin, and afterwards for his intrigues as the leader of the Huguenots. He was wounded at the battle of Dreux, and seven years after fell at that of Jarnac in 1569, aged 39. His Memoirs of his own Times are held in esteem.

CONDE, Henry, Prince of, became a Catholic through the influence of Henry IV, and on the death of Louis XIII became minister to the regent, which post he filled with much credit to himself, and advantage to his country, and died in 1646, aged 58.

CONDE, Louis, Prince of, son of the preceding, deserved the name of Great, for the distinguished abilities which he displayed as a general in the war with the Spaniards. He was afterwards employed against the prince of Orange, when he completed the conquest of Franche-Comté, and died in 1686, aged 65. [Vide Plate XIII.]

CONDILLAC, Stephen, Bonnot de (Biog.) preceptor to the Infant Don Ferdinand, duke of Parma, was born at Grenoble in 1715, and died in 1780, leaving works which were reprinted in France in 1798, in 25 vols. 8vo.

CONDIVÉ, Ascanio (Biog.) an artist of Ripa Transona, wrote a life of Michael Angelo in 1553, entitled 'Vita de Michel Angelo Buonarrotti, raccolta per Ascanio Condivi,' &c. re-published by Gori, in fol. Florence, 1746.

CONDORCET, John Anthony Nicholas Caritat, Marquis de (Hist.) one of the leaders in the French revolution, was born in 1743, and after having voted the abolition of the monarchy, he was for his moderation placed by Robespierre in the list of the proscribed Girondists. He concealed himself for a time, but being arrested as a suspected person, he was found dead in the prison, as was supposed from the effect of poison, in 1793. He was a mathematician and an infidel, and wrote many works suited to that character.

CONETODANUS (Hist.) and Cotuitus, two desperate Gauls, who roused their countrymen against the Romans, &c. Cæs. de Bell. Gall. l. 7.

CONFLUENTES (Geog.) a town of Germany, so called from its situation at the confluence of the Rhine and Moselle, now Coblentz.

CONFUCIUS (Hist.) a Chinese legislator and philosopher, who died about 479 years A.C., was descended from a family allied to the throne, and had a great share in establishing the legislation of his country. His writings, which are preserved in six books, have been translated by Noel, one of the most ancient missionaries of China, and printed at Prague in 1711.

CONGAL (Hist.) the name of three kings of Scotland.

CONGAL I, succeeded his uncle Constantine I, and died in 500, after a reign of 22 years, in which he preserved peace with his neighbours, and endeavoured to ameliorate the condition of his subjects. He was succeeded by his brother Gonran. The effigies of this and the following princes are given, as in the annexed figures.

CONGAL II, succeeded Eugene III in 558, and died in 568, after a peaceful reign, in which he recommended virtue to his subjects, by his own example.

CONGAL III, succeeded Achaius, and died in 814, after a reign of five years.

CONGREVE (Her.) the name of a family of Saxon origin, the ancestor of which settled in the county of Stafford, when Mercia was formed into the sixth kingdom of the Heptarchy in 584. Sir William Congreve, a descendant of this family, was created a baronet in 1812; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Sable, a chevron between three battle axes argent.

Crest. A falcon, wings expanded. Round the crest the word "Persevere."

Motto. "Non moritur cujus fama vivit."

CONGREVE, William (Biog.) a poet and dramatic writer of Bardsey-Grange, near Leeds, was born in 1669, and died in 1729. He wrote four comedies, namely, the 'Old Bachelor,' 'The Double Dealer,' 'Love for Love,' and 'The Way of the World'; also the 'Mourning Bride,' a tragedy; besides some translations, Imitations of Horace, and occasional Poems, which have given him a place among the British poets. [Vide Plate XXX]

Emperors of this Name.

CONRAD I, count of Franconia, was elected emperor or king of Germany in 912, and died of the wounds he received in the war with Bavaria in 918, after a reign of six years and upwards.

CONRAD II, surnamed the Salic, son of Herman, duke of Worms and Franconia, was elected emperor in 1024, and died after a warlike but successful reign of 14 years. Genebrard. in Chron.; Otho. de Freimigen. l. 9.

CONRAD III, son of Frederic, duke of Suabia, was elected in 1138. He went to the crusade, but owing to the treachery of the Greeks, who poisoned the fountains, he lost nearly his whole army, and returned with difficulty to Europe, where he died in 1152.

VOL. I.

Other Princes of this Name.

CONRAD, Duke of Suabia, son of Frederic II, was made king of the Romans in 1233, and aimed at being elected emperor, in which he was opposed by pope Innocent IV. He in consequence passed into Italy, and after taking Naples, Capua, and Aquino, he died in 1254, as was supposed of poison. Genebrard. in Chron.; Platin. in Innocent IV.

CONRAD, son of the emperor Henry IV, signalized himself on many occasions during the contests which his father had with the popes. He was crowned king of Lombardy in 1093, and died after a reign of nine years.

CONRAD, surnamed the Pacific, king of Burgundy, succeeded his father in 937, and died in 994, after a peaceful reign, in which he had erected many pious foundations.

CONRAD, Duke of Lorrain, was deprived of his duchy by his father-in-law the emperor Otho, because he had joined in the revolt of the emperor's son Lindolphus.

CONRAD, Marquis of Montserrat, and Prince of Tyre, distinguished himself very often against the infidels, and after obtaining the title of king of Jerusalem, he was assassinated in 1192 as is generally supposed by the Ismaelians.

CONRAD, son of Frederic, the natural son of the emperor Frederic II, who bore the title of prince of Antioch, was taken prisoner by Charles of Anjou, while fighting in behalf of his cousin Conradin, when his eyes were put out, and he was strangled.

CONRAD (Ecc.) cardinal and archbishop of Mentz, who was nearly related to the emperor Barbarossa. He went on a crusade to the Holy Land, where he consecrated Leo, king of Armenia, and on his return died in 1200.

CONRAD, son of Eginon, count of Urach, was created a cardinal by Honorius III in 1210, and after being sent as a legate into France, died in 1227.

CONRAD, bishop of Utrecht in the 11th century, was preceptor to the emperor Henry IV, and whilst founding the collegiate church of Notre Dame, he was killed by a mason in 1099, because another workman had been employed to complete the work. He wrote among other things 'Apologia de Unitate Ecclesie conservanda,' &c. published by Marquadus Freherus, in the first volume of the 'Scriptores Historie Germani.'

CONRADIN (Hist.) or Conrad the Younger, the son of Conrad, and grandson of Frederic II the emperor, was a competitor with Charles of Anjou for the crown of Sicily, who having defeated and taken him prisoner in a pitched battle near the lake of Fucino, caused him and his cousin Frederick to be beheaded as disturbers of the peace.

CONRART, Valentine (Hist.) counsellor and secretary to the king, descended of a noble family of Hainault, was considered as one of the fathers and founders of the French Academy, which first began to assemble in his house in 1629, and continued its meetings there till 1634. He died in 1675, leaving some few works as an author, as 'Letters to Felicien,' 'A Treatise on Oratorical Action,' &c.

CONRINGIUS, Hermannus (Biog.) a political writer of Emlden, was born in 1606, and died in 1681. His works on the Germanic Institution, Polemical Divinity, Medicine, and Antiquities, &c. were published in six vols. fol. Brunsv. 1730.

CONSENTIA (Geog.) a town of the Bruttii, now Cosenza, which submitted to Annibal for a time, but afterwards returned to the allegiance which it had sworn to the Roman state. Liv. l. 8; Cic. in Fin. l. 1, c. 3.

CONSTABLE, Henry (Biog.) an English poet of the 16th century, was educated at Oxford, and wrote 'Diana, or the excellent conceitful Sonnets of H. C.' &c. 8vo. 1594.

CONSTABLE, John, another poet, who was educated at Oxford, and took his degree of A. M. in 1515, published 'Querela Veritatis,' and 'Epigrammata,' 4to. 1520.

CONSTANCE (Hist.) daughter of William I, count of Provence, and wife of Robert, king of France, caused much trouble in the kingdom by her intrigues in favour of her younger son Robert, whom she wished to succeed his father in preference to Henry the elder; but failing in her projects, she died in 1032.

CONSTANCE of France, daughter of Louis VI, was first married to Eustace of Blois, who was crowned king of England in 1140, and at his death, to Raimond VI, count of Toulouse.

CONSTANCE, daughter of Roger I, king of Sicily, was married to the emperor Henry VI in 1185, laid claim at the death of her father to the crown of Sicily, in which she had Tancred for a competitor; but the pope Innocent III was on the point of investing her with the regal dignity when she died in 1198.

CONSTANCE, queen of Arragon, and daughter of Manfred, the natural son of the emperor Frederic II, was married to Peter III, king of Arragon, and flourished about 1284. She was distinguished for her piety, as also for the magnanimity and clemency which she displayed as sovereign of Sicily towards Charles of Anjou, who was condemned to die on the scaffold, for having beheaded Conradin, of Suabia, but was pardoned by her.

CONSTANCE (Geog.) in Latin Constantia, a town in the grand duchy of Baden, situated on a lake of the same name, called by the ancients Lacus Brigantinus, 30 m. N. E. Zurich, 70 m. E. S. E. Freyburg, and 106 E. Carlsruhe. Lon. 9° 8' E., lat. 47° 36' N.

History of Constance.

Constance is supposed to be the Ganaudunum or Heradunum, of Ptolemy, which received its name from Constantius Chlorus, the father of Constantine the Great, or from Constantia, daughter of that emperor. The bishopric was transported thither from Vindisch by Childebert II; a city that was ruined in 594 in order to punish the revolt of the Varrii. S. Best was the first bishop of this see, which is now secularized. A council-general was held here in 1414, and the three subsequent years, at which Hus and Jerome, of Prague, were condemned to be burnt.

CONSTANS, Flavius Julius (Hist.) third son of the emperor Constantine, had for his share of his father's dominions Italy, Africa, and Illyria; and after having defeated and killed his brother Constantine, who wanted to strip him of his possessions, he was himself killed by the usurper Magnentius in 350, after a reign of 13 years. S. Athanas. Apol. ad Const.; Socrat. Hist. Eccles. l. 2; Sozom. l. 4; Aurel. Vict. Epit. Hist.; Baron. Annal. Eccl.

CONSTANS II, son of Constantine III, was raised to the empire in the place of his uncle Heracleon, by the help of the Monothlitæ, whose heresies he followed, and was killed in 668 by Andrew, one of his domestics, after a reign of 26 years, during which time he defeated the Saracens and the Lombards. Cedren. et Theophan. Annal.; Paul. Diacon. de Reb. Longob. l. 5.

CONSTANS, Flavius Claudius, son of the usurper Constantine, was sent into Spain in order to conquer it, but perished in the attempt. Sozom. Hist. Eccl. l. 6; Prosper. et Marcellin. in Chron.

CONSTANS (Numis.) the effigies of the above-mentioned emperors are given on medals, as in the annexed figures, of Constans I, and Constans II with his son Constantine; inscriptions for the first, DN. CONSTANS NOB. CÆSAR.—FL. JUL. CONSTANS NOB. CÆS. vel AUGUSTUS.—FL. CON-

STANS P. F. AUG. &c.; for the second DN. CONSTANS CONSTANTINUS, &c. Beg. Thes.; Banduri, &c.

CONSTANTIA (Hist.) daughter of the emperor Constantius Chlorus, was married to Licinius, who revolted against the emperor Constantine the Great, obtained pardon for her husband after being defeated the first time; and at his death she continued in the good graces of her brother the emperor. She is said to have favoured the heretic Arius. Socrat. Hist. Eccles. l. 1; Theodoret. l. 2; S. Hieron. Epist. ad Ctesiph. &c.

CONSTANTIA, the name of two daughters of Constantine the Great; the first of which, also called Constantina, is celebrated by the Romanists for her piety; and the second, who married Annibalianus, is said to have been just as wicked.

CONSTANTIA, daughter of the emperor Constantius, was married to the emperor Gratianus. Ammian. Marcellin. l. 21; St. Ambros. Serm. de S. Agni; Baron. Annal. 324.

CONSTANT, David (Biog.) a professor of theology at Lausanne, was born in 1638, and died in 1733, leaving editions of Florus, Cicero's Offices, and the Colloquies of Erasmus; besides various dissertations on theological and political subjects.

CONSTANTIANUS (Ecc.) a recluse in the country of the Maine, in the time of Clovis I, was employed as a missionary in those parts by Innocent and Domnole, bishops of Mans.

CONSTANTIN, Robert (Biog.) a physician of Caen, was born in 1502, and died at the age of 103, leaving a Lexicon, Greek and Latin, which appeared in 1562; and a second edition, greatly improved, in 2 vols. fol. 1592. Those of Geneva, 1607, and Leyden, 1637, are the same only with new title pages.

CONSTANTINE (Hist.) vide Constantinus.

CONSTANTINE, a name common to some kings of Scotland.

CONSTANTINE I, succeeded his brother Donard, in 464, and was strangled by a man of the Hebrides, whose daughter he had violated, in the 17th year of his reign. The effigies of this and the following princes are given, as in the annexed figures. Buchan. Hist.

CONSTANTINE II, son of Kennet II, succeeded his uncle Donald V, in 858, and being taken in battle by Hubert, brother of Cadan, king of Denmark, he was killed by his order, after a reign of 13 years. Buchan. Hist.

CONSTANTINE III, brother of the preceding, succeeded Donald VI in 903; and after a prosperous reign of 30 years retired to a monastery in disgust, at the loss of Northumberland and Cumberland, which were taken from him after a bloody battle. Buchan. Hist.

CONSTANTINE IV, surnamed the Bald, son of Culen, succeeded Kennet III in 992; but was defeated and killed by a natural son of the latter, after a reign of two or three years.

CONSTANTINE (Ecc.) vide Constantinus.

CONSTANTINE, de Medicis, bishop of Orviette, and legate from the pope Alexander IV, to Theodore, emperor of the Greeks, was born at Florence, of the illustrious house of Medicis, and died in 1258.

CONSTANTINE (Biog.) a Benedictine, surnamed the African, because he was originally of Carthage, distinguished himself in the 11th century by his knowledge of the Oriental languages, and wrote many works on medicine, among others, 'Dictæ Universales,' 'De Ponderibus Medicinalibus,' &c.

CONSTANTINE, Manasses, a Greek historian of the 12th century, in the time of the emperor Manuel Comnenus, wrote in verse 'Synopsis Historica,' translated by Leunclavius, and published in Greek, first by Meursius.

CONSTANTINOPLE (Geog.) one of the largest cities in Europe, and capital of the Turkish empire, is of a triangular form, and seated between the Black Sea and the Archipelago, on a neck of land that advances towards Natolia, from which it is separated by a strait a mile in breadth. It is 700 m. S. E. Vienna, 1500 m. E. by S. Paris. Lon. 25° 56' E., lat. 41° N.

❖ History of Constantinople.

Constantinople was originally called Byzantium, and received the name of Constantinopolis, i. e. Constantine's City, from Constantine, who built it anew, and made it the seat of the empire. By the Turks it is named Samboul, and by the Europeans Constantinople, or the Porte, from Porta aurea, a gate leading to the sea of Marmora. From the time of Constantine to its capture by the Turks, it experienced more calamities than ever befel any city within the same period. In 446 it was visited with the plague and famine, which evils were aggravated by a sedition of the people, caused by the followers of the heretic Nestorius, when a church was burnt, and a number of people massacred. The year following it suffered from an earthquake, which lasted six months, and destroyed many buildings. In 465 it was almost ruined by a conflagration; and in 557, in the reign of Justinian, it was totally overturned by an earthquake, but was rebuilt with greater magnificence than before. It was often besieged by the Saracens, and taken more than once, namely, by Constantine Copronymus in 744, and by the French in 1203, who kept it for 58 years, during the reigns of Baldwin I, Henry, Peter, Robert, and Baldwin II, when it was recovered by Michael Paleologus in 1261. Two hundred years after this it was besieged, in the reign of Constantine Paleologus, surnamed Dracoses, by Mahomet II, sultan of the Turks, who took it in the year of the Hegira 857, A. D. 1467, after a desperate assault, in which the emperor, and the principal men of his court, perished. The following is a list of the emperors, in chronological succession:

Ecclesiastical History of Constantinople.

The church of Byzantium is said by some authors to have been founded by St. Andrew; but the pope Agapetus maintained that St. Peter first preached the gospel in that city. When it was destroyed by the emperor Severus, the see was transferred to Heraclea, where it remained till its revival under the name of Constantinople, when the church obtained the second rank after that of Rome; and the bishops of Constantinople, who were named patriarchs, gradually obtained such power by the countenance of the emperors, as to become altogether independent of the see of Rome. John, surnamed the Faster, was the first who took the title of Œcumenicus, or Universal, which the popes in vain opposed as a fresh usurpation. The separation of the two churches, and the supremacy of the patriarchate of Constantinople over all the churches of the East, was henceforth established. Constantinople was in the time of the emperors the theatre of heresy and schism. The Arians were for a long time triumphant; and, but for the powerful zeal of Gregory Nazianzene, would have gained the entire ascendancy. The Nestorians, the Eutychians Monothelites, and the Iconoclastes, by turns prevailed, so as to render this church a perpetual scene of religious discord and animosity. Several general councils were held here, namely, in 381, 553, 680, 869; besides some particular councils in 336, 359, 382, 394, 424, 439, 449, 459, 518, &c. The following is a chronological list of the patriarchs of Constantinople, until its capture:

CONSTANTINUS (Hist.) a name common to several Roman emperors and princes.
CONSTANTINUS, Flavius Valerius , surnamed the Great , son of Constantius and Helena, was born at Naissus, in Dacia, succeeded his father in 306; and died after a reign of 31 years of the greatest glory and success, during which he was led to embrace the Christian faith, though not to lay aside all his heathenish practices. He is said to have preached and to have composed many sermons, one of which is extant. [Vide Plate II]. His empire was divided between his three sons Constantinus, Constans, and Constantius. Euseb. Hist. Eccles.; Socrat. Hist. Eccles.; Sozomines; Zonaras, &c.
CONSTANTINUS II , surnamed the Younger , son of the preceding, had Gaul, Spain, and Great Britain for his share of his father's dominions; and was in 340 killed in battle against his brother Constantius, after a reign of three years. [Vide Constantinus , under Numismatics] Victor. in Annibalian.; Zozim. l. 2, &c.
CONSTANTINUS III , son of the emperor Heraclius, was crowned in 613, succeeded his father in 641, and died, as is said, of poison, after he had reigned alone for only three months. Nicephorus; Theophanes; Cedrenus; Zonaras, &c.; Paul. Diacon. l. 5.

CONSTANTINUS IV, son of Heraclius by his second wife Martina, succeeded his brother Constantin III; but being deserted by his subjects in favour of his nephew Constans, he was sent into exile, and died in prison, after having reigned only six months.

CONSTANTINUS V, surnamed Pogonatus, succeeded his father Constans II in 668, and died in the 17th year of his reign. Theophanes et Cedrenus.

CONSTANTINUS VI, surnamed Copronymus, son of Leo the Isaurian, succeeded his father in 742, and died in 775, after having displayed a cruel and furious zeal against the worshippers of images. Theophanes et Cedrenus.

CONSTANTINUS VII, son of the emperor Leo IV, began to reign in 780, at the age of 10, his mother, Irene, administering the government in his stead; but he, unwilling to submit to her guidance, took upon himself in 790 the management of the state, upon which she formed a party against him, and, having put out his eyes, deprived him of the empire in 797. Theoph. et Cedren.

CONSTANTINUS VIII, son of Basilus, the Macedonian, was created Augustus in 868; but dying before his father, he is not always reckoned among the emperors.

CONSTANTINUS IX, surnamed Porphyrogenetus, son of Leo the Wise, began to reign under the tutelage of his mother Zoe in 912, and was poisoned by his son Romanus, after a reign of more than 48 years, in which his father-in-law, Romanus, had given him much trouble. Glycas.; Theoph.; Cedren. &c.

CONSTANTINUS X, son of Romanus and Theophanes, succeeded John Zimisces, and reigned with his brother, Basilus the Younger, for 50 years, namely, from 975 to 1025, during which he bore the name only of emperor, taking no part in the administration of affairs.

CONSTANTINUS XI, surnamed Monomachus, being recalled from the exile into which he had been sent by order of John, the brother of Michael the Paphlagonian, was placed on the throne in 1042, and died after a reign of 12 years.

CONSTANTINUS XII, surnamed Ducas, son of Andronicus was chosen by Isaac Comnenus to take the empire in 1059, and died at the age of 60, after a reign of seven years, during which he was menaced by a formidable army of Scythians, the greater part of which were providentially cut off by the plague, and the rest by the Bulgarians. Glycas et Zonaras, &c.

CONSTANTINUS XIII, surnamed Dracoses, son of Manuel Palæologus, and last emperor of the East, succeeded his brother John in 1445, and perished in the defence of Constantinople, when it was besieged, and taken by Mahomet II in 1453. History of Copenhagen.

Copenhagen, Coppenhafen, or Kopman Hafen, i. e. Merchants' Harbour, called in the Latin Hafna, is a town of comparatively modern date, the name occurring not earlier than 1048. In 1168 Absalon, or Axel, archbishop of Lunden, and bishop of Roschildt, having received this place in gift from the king of Denmark, caused a fort to be built, by way of protection from the pirates that swarmed in those parts. The place in consequence gradually increased, and 30 years after it received many of the privileges of a town, and finally, in 1443, became the residence of the court. It has experienced a variety of misfortunes from war, particularly from the Swedes, and also from the British in the bombardment of 1807, when 500 houses, including the cathedral, and part of the university, were destroyed. It has also suffered from different fires, particularly in 1728, which consumed two-thirds of the town, and in 1794, which destroyed nearly 1000 houses.

CORBET, John (Biog.) a native of Gloucester, educated at Magdalen Hall, Oxford, was ejected from the living of Bramshot, in Hampshire, for non-conformity, and died in 1680. He wrote, 1. 'Historical Relation of the Military Government of Gloucester, from the Beginning of the Civil War,' &c. 4to. 1645. 2. 'The Interest of England in the Matter of Religion,' 8vo. 1661; besides the share he had in compiling the first volume of Rushworth's 'Historical Collections,' and some practical treatises which he wrote.

CORBULO, Domitius (Hist.) a prefect of Belgium, who, when governor of Syria, routed the Parthians, destroyed

Artaxata, and established Tigranes in the kingdom of Armenia. Understanding that Nero had sentenced him to die, he fell upon his own sword. Tac. Annal. l. 11.

CORCYRA (Geog.) Κερκύρα, an island in the Ionian Sea, famous for the shipwreck of Ulysses. It was otherwise called Drepane, Scheria, and Phœacia, and now Corfu. The Athenians began the Peloponnesian war by attacking the Corcyreans, who sought the aid of the Spartans. When Corcyra was in the possession of the Romans, it became a valuable station for their ships.

CORDARA, Julius Cæsar (Biog.) a Jesuit of Alexandria de la Paglia, was born in 1704, and died in 1790, leaving, besides some dramas, 1. 'Historia Societatis Jesu Pars VI,' &c. 2 vols. fol. 2. 'Caroli Edwardi Stuartii, Wallie Principis Expositio in Scotiam,' &c.

CORDAY d'Amant, Mary Anne Charlotte (Hist.) a native of St. Saturnin, in Normandy, assassinated Marat while he was perusing some papers, which she pretended to bring him, because he had condemned to death her lover Bel-sunce, the major of the regiment. She afterwards heard her sentence with composure, and, ascending the scaffold with serenity and dignity, was guillotined in 1793, at the age of 24.

CORDEMOI, Gerard le (Biog.) an historian, of a noble family, originally of Auvergne, who died in 1684, wrote 'L'Histoire de la Première et Seconde Race,' &c. 2 vols. fol. 1685; besides different Treatises on Theology, &c. which were published under the title of 'Œuvres de feu M. de Cordemoi.'

ORDERIUS (Biog.) or Cordier Mathurin, a Latin scholar of France, who died in 1564, published, besides his well-known 'Colloquia,' 1. 'Epitres Chrétiennes,' 16mo. Lyons, 1557. 2. 'Cantiques Spirituels en Nombre 26,' 1560, &c.

CORDES (Biog.) or Corderius, John, a Jesuit of Limoges, was born in 1570, and died in 1642, leaving a translation of father Paul's 'History of the Differences between Pope Paul V and the Republic of Venice'; and likewise of Camillo Portio's 'History of the Troubles in the Kingdom of Naples under Ferdinand I.'

CORDES, or Corderius, Balthasar, a scholar of Antwerp, was born in 1592, and died in 1650. He edited, 1. 'S. Dionysii Opera Omnia, Gr. et Lat. cum Scholiis,' &c. 2 tom. fol. 1634. 2. 'Expositiones Patrum Græcorum,' &c. 3 tom. fol. 1643. 3. 'S. Cyrilli Homilie in Jeremiam,' 8vo. 1648, &c.

CORDOVA (Hist.) the name of an illustrious Spanish family, which takes its name from the city of Cordova, after its capture from the Moors.

CORDOVA, Gonsalves Fernandez de, styled the Great Captain, from the greatness of his exploits, after having signalized himself in Portugal, in the service of Ferdinand and Isabella, was sent to Naples, and carried every thing before him; but his successes exciting the distrust of Ferdinand he was recalled, and died full of chagrin at Grenada in 1515. P. Poncet, a Jesuit, published the Life of this captain, in 2 vols. 12mo. Paris, 1714.

CORDOVA, Ferdinand de (Biog.) vide Ferdinand.

CORDOVA (Geog.) a town of Andalusia, in Spain, situated on a gentle declivity, at the foot of a branch of the Sierra Morena, on the north bank of the Guadalquivir, 76 miles N. E. Seville, 120 N. E. Cadiz, 180 S. S. W. Madrid. Lon. 4° 45' W., lat. 37° 52' N.

History of Cordova.

Cordova, known to the Romans by the name of Corduba, was taken by the Goths in 572, and by the Moors in 692, under Abderrahman, general of the Moors, of the house of Ommeya, who established a kingdom there, and reigned, together with his descendants, namely, Issen or Ozmen, Alhacanon, Alcatan, Abderrahman II, Mahomet, Al-mundir, Abdala, Abderrahman III, and Hiscen or Hassan, which last was imprisoned and deposed by Mahomet Mohdi, who caused himself to be proclaimed king of Cordova; but the divisions among the Moors increasing in proportion to their ill success against the Christians, Cordova ceased to be an independent principality, and was at length taken in 1233 by Ferdinand, king of Leon and Castile. Cordova was the birth-place of the celebrated captain Gonsalvez de Cordova, Ambrosius Moralia, and others; and here also taught Averroes and Avicenna.

Ecclesiastical History of Cordova.

Cordova is a bishop's see, suffragan of Toledo, which suffered much during the persecutions of Diocletian, and that of the Moors in the ninth century. Among the martyrs in the first persecution were Osius, its bishop, S. Asicles, S. Zoilus, &c.; among those in the second were S. Euloge, a priest and martyrologist, S. Perfectus, a priest, S. Colombe, a virgin, Pomposa, a nun of Cordova, S. Paul Diaconus, and very many others. [Vide Corduba] A council was held here in 348, at which Osius presided; and a pretended synod was held in the ninth century, for the purpose of discouraging martyrdom, to which many exposed themselves by their open profession of Christianity. *Ambros. CORFE Castle (Geog.) a borough in Dorsetshire, seated in a peninsula called the Isle of Purbeck, on a river between two hills, on one of which stands the castle, where king Edward the Martyr was stabbed, at the instigation of his mother-in-law Elfrida. King John also ordered 22 prisoners, among whom were some of the first nobility, to be starved to death here; and Peter of Pontefract was imprisoned for prophesying his death. This castle is more honourably distinguished by the noble defence which lady Banks made, with a slender garrison, against the rebel army, in the reign of Charles I. It is 21 m. E. Dorchester, 116 W. by S. London. Lon. 2° 4' W., lat. 50° 36' N.

CORFU (Geog.) an island in that part of the Mediterranean called the Ionian Sea, situated at the entrance of the Gulf of Venice, on the coast of South Albania, from which it is separated by a channel, varying from two to six miles in width; the capital of which, also called Corfu, is situated in lon. 20° 17' E., lat. 39° 40' N.

History of Corfu.

Corfu, known to the ancients by different names, but particularly by that of Corcyra, [vide Corcyra] passed from the Romans to the kings of Naples until the 14th century, when the inhabitants put themselves under the protection of the Venetians, by whom it was well fortified, to protect it against the Turks. The latter made a fruitless attempt upon the island in 1537, under the famous Barbarossa, when they were compelled to make a shameful retreat; and in 1716 they besieged the city of Corfu, but were compelled to raise the siege, with the loss of their cannon and ammunition. It was taken by the French in 1797, and by the Turkish and Russian fleets in 1799; since which it has formed a part of the republic of the Seven Isles; and after passing again through the hands of the French, was in 1815 placed under the protection of the British government.

CORGNIA (Ecc.) or Fulvio de la Corgnia, in Latin Fulvius Corneus, called Cardinal of Perugia, was born at this place in 1517, created cardinal by his maternal uncle Julius III in 1551, and died in 1583, after having had a great share in the government of the church. His two brothers, John and Ascanio de la Corgnia, were employed with distinction in a military capacity.

CORILLA, Maria Maddalena Fernandez (Biog.) a celebrated improvisatrice of Pistoia, was born in 1740, and died in 1800, after having given such displays of her talent at improvisation, on the occasion of her being solemnly crowned at Rome in 1779, as astonished all who were present. A narrative of this event was published at Parma, under the title of 'Atti della solenne Coronazione fatta in Campidoglio della Insigne Poetessa Dona Maria Maddalena Morelli Fernandez Pistoiese fragli Arcadi Corilla Olimpica.'

CORINNA (Biog.) a beautiful woman, of Tanagra, near Thebes, who is said to have obtained the poetical prize seven times, although she had Pindar for a competitor. Her countrymen erected a statue to her memory.

She is said to have composed 50 books of odes and epigrams, of which only a few verses remain that are inserted in Fabricius' 'Bibliotheca Græca.'

CORINNA, the name under which Ovid speaks of one of his mistresses.

CORINNUS (Biog.) an ancient poet in the time of the Trojan war, from whom Homer is supposed to have taken the subject of his poem. Suidas; Meursius.

CORINTH (Geog.) a town of the Morea, in Greece, the capital of the district of Kordos, situated near the Isthmus of Corinth, on the northern declivity of Mount Phouka, 48 m. E. of Athens, 342 S. W. Constantinople. Lon. 23° 28' E., lat. 37° 58' N.

History of Corinth.

Corinth, called by the inhabitants Corinto, or Coranto, and by the ancients Corinthus, [vide Corinthus] fell into the hands of the Venetians, from whom it was taken in 1458. It was retaken by them in 1687, after the victory which they gained near Patras; but the Turks became again masters of it in 1715. It has at present the appearance of a village more than a town, the houses being scattered in groups, and separated by corn-fields, &c. The traces of the ancient walls are still discernible; but the only interesting monument of antiquity is the acrocorinthos, or citadel, situated on a diverging ridge a considerable way above the town. The wall, which was built by Xerxes across the isthmus, was demolished by Mahomet II; and when, in 1468, the Venetians began to rebuild it, they were obliged to desist.

Ecclesiastical History of Corinth.

Corinth, under the emperors of the East, was a metropolitan see, subject to the patriarchate of Constantinople, and having for suffragans Zante and Cephalonia. S. Dionysius was bishop of Corinth in the time of the emperor Marcus Aurelius, as Primus had been in the time of Adrian. S. Cyriachus, a celebrated anchorite of Palestine, was born here in 448.

CORINTHUS (Bibl.) Κόρινθος, Corinth, the well-known city of this name, where St. Paul preached A. D. 52, and continued 18 months. He also wrote two epistles to the Christian inhabitants of that place, the first from Ephesus and the second from Macedonia. It is also supposed that he visited Corinth again A. D. 57. Acts xx. 2; Cor. xii. 14, xiii. 1; Usser. Annal.

CORINTHUS (Geog.) Corinth, one of the most flourishing cities of Greece, situated between the Sinus Saronicus, and the Sinus Crisseus, whence it is called by the poets binaris. Hor. l. 2, od. 6.

And by Nonnus ἀλιζέφανος, and ἰσθμικός. Corinth was first founded by Sisyphus the son of Æolus, A. M. 2616, and is said to have received its name from Corinthus, the son of Pelops, who rebuilt it after it had been destroyed, previous to which it was called Ephyre. It was likewise called Heliopolis, or the city of the sun, and was defended by a citadel called Acrocorinthus, of an immense height, whence the proverb 'Οὐ παρὺς ἀνδρὸς ἐς Κόρινθον ἐστὶ ὁ πᾶς, which Horace has rendered for what is arduous.

Horat. in Epist.

Non cuius homini contingit adire Corinthum.

Cicero calls it "Græciæ lumen," and Florus, "Decus Græciæ." The Corinthians established different colonies, among others that of Corcyra; and by the advantages of their situation acquired immense wealth, which was displayed in the magnificence of their buildings, and their luxurious style of living. This wealth disappeared on the capture of it by L. Menenius, the consul, in the 158th Olympiad, A. C. 146, who carried away to Rome every thing valuable which had not been destroyed in the conflagration. Julius Cæsar afterwards founded a colony here, by which it was in some degree restored to its former consequence. The government of Corinth was at first monarchical, of which Sisyphus was the first king, who began to reign A. M. 2597, having for his successors Ornytion, Thoas, Damophon, Propodas, Dorias, and Hyantidas. These were succeeded by four of the family of the Heracidae, and the rest of the Bacchidae, of whom the following is a list in chronological succession:

They then formed themselves into a republic, having magistrates called Prytanæ, which first government was interrupted by the usurpation of Cypselus, who got the sovereign power into his hands in the 30th Olympiad, A. C. 658, and retained it for 30 years, when he was succeeded by Periander, who held the sovereignty for 44 years. The war which has received the name of Corinthian, because several battles were fought in the neighbourhood of Corinth, was begun A. C. 395, by the combination of the Athenians, Thebans, Corinthians, and Argives, against Lacedæmon. Hom. Il. l. 15; Herod. l. 5; Thucyd. l. 1; Apollod. l. 1; Polyb. l. 2; *Cic. to be made in fig. 1, to its situation between two seas, where a naked figure, representing the genius of the city, is holding an ore in each hand. Its maritime situation is moreover alluded to by the figure of a dolphin, a trident, and sometimes that of Neptune with his attributes, sitting on the prow of a ship, as in fig. 2. One of its most frequent types was Bellephoron on Pegasus, as in fig. 3, going to kill the chimæra, or Pegasus alone, as in fig. 9, which was symbolical of their antiquity and connection with the fable of Bellephoron, who was said to have killed Delias, the brother of Corinth. The Pegasus and Bellephoron were depicted in a variety of forms. The fable of Melicerta is also alluded to, as in fig. 4, wherein he is represented lying on a dolphin in the middle of a temple, with a tree by his side, near which he was supposed to have been buried; in fig. 5, is depicted an athlete holding a figure of Victory, and accompanied with the tree and the dolphin, in allusion to the supposed origin of the Isthmian games, which are farther illustrated in fig. 6.

CORIO, Bernabò (Biog.) an historian of an illustrious family of Mantua, was born in 1460, and died in 1500. He wrote 'Storia di Milano,' fol. Milan. 1503, also 4to. Venice, 1554, 1565, and Paris, 1646, which are inferior editions.

CORIO LANUS, C. Martius (Hist.) a celebrated Roman general, so called from his conquest of Corioli, a town of the Volsci, was banished from Rome in consequence of the seditions of the people, and, retiring to the Volsci, he aided them in their attack on the city of Rome, from which he departed only in consequence of the entreaties of his wife Volturnia, and his mother Veturia. He was afterwards put to death by the Volsci for this indulgence to his countrymen. Dionys. Hal. l. 1; Liv. l. 2; Flor. l. 2; Plut. in Vit.

CORIOLI (Geog.) a town of Latium, on the borders of the Volsci, celebrated for the siege which was successfully carried on against it by C. Martius, who on that account received the surname of Coriolanus. Liv. l. 2; Plin. l. 3; Plut. &c.

CORK and Orrery, Earl of (Hicr.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Boyle, [vide Boyle] which with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Boyle, earl of Cork and Orrery, viscount Dungarvan and Kynalmeaky, baron Boyle of Youghall, baron of Bandon-bridge, and Broghill, co. Cork, baron Boyle, of Marston, co. Somerset. The title of the eldest son, viscount Dungarvan.

Arms. Party per bend crenelle, argent and gules.

Crest. On a wreath, a lion's head erased, party per pale crenelle argent and gules.

Supporters. Two lions party per pale crenelle, the dexter gules and argent; the sinister of the second and first.

Motto. "Honor virtutis premium."

CORK (Geog.) a city of Ireland, and capital of a county of the same name, situated on the river Lee, 126 m. S.W. Dublin. Lon. 8° 28' W., lat. 51° 50' N.; is supposed to have been built by the Danes in the sixth century. It acknowledged the sovereignty of Henry II in the 12th century, was occupied by James II after the Revolution in 1688, but was besieged and taken in 1690, by the then earl of Marlborough.

CORNARIUS (Biog.) or Haguenbot, John, a physician of Zwickaw, in Saxony, was born in 1500, and died in 1558, leaving several medical treatises, and translations of some of the poems of the ancients on medicine and botany.

CORNARO, Lewis (Biog.) a noble Venetian, who died in 1566, at the age of 98, left, among other things, a treatise 'De Vitæ Sobriæ Commodis.'

CORNAZZANO, Antonio (Biog.) a poet of Placentia, in the 13th century, wrote 'Lyric Poems,' 8vo. Venice, 1502, and Milan 1519; and also a poem 'De Re Militari,' fol. Venet. 1473, 8vo. Pesar. 1507.

CORNEILLAN, James de (Ecc.) bishop of Vabre, and afterwards of Rodez, accompanied his uncle Cardinal d'Armagnac in his embassy to pope Paul III, and after making munificent donations to the society of the Jesuits, died in 1582.

CORNEILLAN, Francis de, nephew of the preceding, succeeded his uncle in the see of Rodez, where he suffered much from the violence of the Huguenots, who plundered him of his revenues, and compelled him to absent himself for many years. He died in 1614, bearing the reputation of one of the most learned and illustrious prelates of his time.

CORNEILLAN, Bernardin de, nephew of the preceding, succeeded his uncle in the see of Rodez, and after having founded a college and several schools in his diocese, died in 1645.

CORNEILLE, Peter (Biog.) a dramatic writer, called by the French the Shakespeare of France, was born at Roen in 1606, and died in 1684. Of the editions of Corneille, consisting of nine comedies, and twenty-two tragedies, the best are that of Joby, 10 vols. 12mo. 1758, that of Voltaire, 12 vols. 8vo. 1764, and the magnificent one of 10 vols. 4to. 1796. [Vide Plate XXX]

CORNEILLE, Thomas, brother to the preceding, and also a poet, but inferior to Peter, was born in 1625, and died in 1709, leaving, besides his dramatic works, 1. A translation of Ovid's Metamorphoses. 2. 'A Dictionary of Arts,' in 2 vols. fol. 3. 'A Universal, Geographical, and Historical Dictionary,' 2 vols. fol.

CORNEILLE, Michael, one of the most distinguished painters in the age of Louis XIV, was born in 1642, and died in 1708. He was employed by the king in all the great works which he was carrying on at Versailles and Trianon, where specimens of his skill are still to be seen.

CORNELIA, gens (Hist.) a Roman family, partly patrician, and partly plebeian, divided into many branches, of which the most ancient were the Cossi, and the Maluginenses; the most illustrious were the Scipiones, the Lentuli, and the Cethegi; the least noble the Blasones, Cinne, Dolabella, Merula, Sylla, and Balbi. [Vide Cornelius] Of this family, it is observed by Cicero, that none were burnt, but interred; Sylla being the first who wished to be burnt. He further adds that the Corneli were so numerous, that they formed a college. Cic. de Leg. l. 2; Pro. Corn. c. 1; Plin. l. 7, c. 54.

CORNELIA, an illustrious Roman lady, the daughter of Scipio Africanus, and wife of Sempronius Gracchus, the consul, U. C. 577, A. C. 177; distinguished herself no less by her careful and prudent education of her children, than by her literary talent. Some of her letters are preserved, of which Cicero and Quintilian speak in terms of commendation. Juvenal seems to condemn her for her haughtiness. Juv. Sat. 6, v. 166.

CORNELIA, daughter of Cinna, and wife of J. Cæsar, by whom she had Julia, the wife of Pompey. She was so much the object of his regard, that at her death he made a funeral oration over her body. Plut. in Cæs.

CORNELIA, daughter of Metellus Scipio, and wife of Pompey, to whom she was devoted during his life, and continued to mourn for him after his death. Plut. in Pomp.

CORNELIA, of the family of the Cossi, was chosen as a vestal in the time of Nero, and was ordered to be buried alive by Domitian, on a charge of incontinence, of which she had once been acquitted, but on its revival was condemned. Plin. l. 8; Epist. 11; Sueton. in Domit. c. 8.

CORNELIA, gens (Numis.) medals are extant of different branches of this family, inscribed with the names of the Cossi, Maluginenses, Scipiones, Lentuli, Blasones, Cinne, Dolabella, Merula, Sulla, and Balbi.

CORNELIUS (Bibl.) centurion of a cohort belonging to the legion surnamed Italian, although a Gentile, served God with his family; in consequence of which he was directed by an angel to send to Peter. On coming the apostle began to instruct him in the truths of the Gospel, when the Holy Ghost fell on him and his family, who were the first fruits of the Gentiles. Acts x. 1, &c. Nothing authentic is known farther of Cornelius, but S. Jerome says that the house in which he dwelt at Cæsarea was converted into a church. His festival, as a saint, is kept by the Latins on the 2d of Feb., and by the Greeks on the 13th of Sept. Bailet, Vie des Saintes.

Arms. Quarterly, 1st and 4th argent, a lion rampant gules, ducally crowned or, within a bordure engrailed sable, bezanty for Cornwall; 2d and 3d vert, a chevron between three garbs or, for Amyand.

Crest. A Cornish chough proper; 2d, a demi-lion rampant gules, ducally crowned or.

Motto. "La vie durante."

CORNIFICIUS, Q. (Hist.) a general and a poet in the age of Augustus, who was employed to accuse Brutus and others. Of his writings, which were much esteemed in their day, nothing remains but a few letters to his friend and correspondent Cicero, with whom he was colleague in the augurship, and a competitor for the consulship. His sister Cornificia, is also said to have had a talent for poetry. Cic. ad Attic. l. 1, ep. 13; Ad Fam. l. 12, &c.; Caull. Carm. 38; Macroh. Sat. l. 3, c. 11, &c.; *Voss. de Poet. CORNUTUS, Cecilius (Hist.) a praetor, who submitted to a voluntary death, rather than be called to an account by Tiberius. Tac. Annal. l. 4.

CORNUTUS, a stoic philosopher of Africa, who was preceptor to the poet Persius, and is said to have been banished by Nero, for offering his opinion too freely on a performance of the emperor's. Pers. Sat. 5, v. 36; Dio. l. 62.

CORNWALL, Duke of (Her.) one of the royal titles enjoyed by the eldest son of the king of England, which was first granted by charter, dated March 13, 11 Edward III, in favour of his son Edward, surnamed the Black Prince, wherein he was declared duke of Cornwall, to hold to himself and his heirs, kings of England, and to their first-born son, by virtue of which charter the eldest son of the king of England is by law acknowledged duke of Cornwall, the instant he is born. At the same time, by a patent, a provision was made for the better support of this dignity and honour, consisting of lands, which lay principally within the duchy of Cornwall, besides all the castles, &c. belonging to the dukedom or earldom of Cornwall, the reversions of which were in the crown. [Vide Wales]

CORNWALL (Geog.) the Cornubia of the ancients, a country that forms the S. W. extremity of England, being bounded on the E. by Devonshire, S. by the English Channel, and N. W. by St. George's Channel, and extending from E. to W. 80 miles. Its principal towns are Launceston, Bodmin, St.

Austin, Falmouth, Truro, Penzance, &c. Its rivers are the Tamar, Lyner, Looe, Fowey, &c.

CORNWALLIS, Sir John (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was in the expedition, in 13 Hen. VIII, with the earl of Surrey, Lord High Admiral, who after scouring the seas, landed at Morlaix, in Bretagne, where Mr. Cornwallis behaved so gallantly in storming a town, that he was knighted by the earl on the spot.

CORNWALLIS, Sir Thomas, eldest son of the preceding, after receiving the honour of knighthood in 1548, behaved himself very bravely in opposing the rebellion of Robert Ket, the tanner, in 1549, although he was overpowered and taken prisoner. He was afterwards very instrumental in suppressing Wyatt's rebellion, after which he was one of the commissioners, who, with the earl of Surrey, and sir Edward Hastings, sat in trial on sir Thomas Wyatt. He was one of queen Mary's privy council, and dissuaded her from sending queen Elizabeth out of England, as was proposed. He died in 1604, at the age of 86.

CORNWALLIS, Sir William, eldest son of the preceding, embarked with Robert Devereux, earl of Essex, in his expedition against the rebels in Ireland in 1599, and was knighted for his services there in the same year.

CORNWALLIS, Sir Charles, second son of sir Thomas, was high in favour with James I, by whom he was knighted in 1603, and sent as ambassador into Spain, where he resided till 1609, with great reputation. His letters, relating to the negotiations in this embassy, fill a considerable part of the second volume, and a portion of the third of 'Windwood's Memorials.' He was afterwards treasurer to Henry, prince of Wales, an account of whose life and death he wrote.

CORNWALLIS, Frederick, Lord, second son of sir William Cornwallis, and nephew of the preceding, distinguished himself by his loyalty, fidelity, and valour during the rebellion, particularly in the fight at Copredy Bridge, co. Oxon, in 1644, where he rescued lord Wilnot, then taken prisoner by the rebels; and, when resistance was useless, he shared in the exile of his royal master, Charles II, and afterwards attended him on his triumphant entry into London. In 1661, three days before his majesty's coronation, he was honoured with the peerage, in testimony of his majesty's high esteem of his faithful services.

CORNWALLIS, Edward, fourth lord, made several campaigns in Flanders under king William.

CORNWALLIS, Edward, sixth son of the preceding, after serving in the campaigns in Flanders in 1744 and 1745, was appointed governor of Placentia, in Newfoundland, where he acted with great prudence and ability. In 1762 he was appointed governor of Gibraltar, and died in 1776.

CORNWALLIS, Charles, second earl and first marquis, was born in 1738, and early engaging in a military life, distinguished himself first in the unfortunate war in America, where, after a diversity of success, he was captured, with his whole army of 4000 men, in Virginia, in 1781. He afterwards acquired the highest honour in India, in the double capacity of governor-general and commander-in-chief; where, by the capture of Seringapatam in 1791, he subdued one of the bitterest enemies to the English in India. In 1792 he was appointed viceroy in Ireland, where he added to his well-earned reputation, by combining firmness and conciliation so as to suppress the rebellion then raging in that country. In 1804 he was again appointed governor-general of the East Indies; and in that station died at Gawnepoor in 1805, worn out with a course of active and glorious services which will endear his name to posterity.

CORNWALLIS, Frederick (Ecc.) seventh son of Charles, fourth lord Cornwallis, was fellow of Christ College, Cambridge; consecrated bishop of Michfield and Coventry in 1749; elected archbishop of Canterbury in 1768; and died in 1783 at the age of 70.

CORNWALLIS (Her.) the name of a family which has been settled in Suffolk for many centuries, of which the most distinguished notice has been taken under the head of History. Thomas Cornwallis, or Cornwalleyis, as it was originally written, was sheriff of London in 1738, from whom descended Frederick Cornwallis, the first who was advanced to the dignity of the peerage, as baron Cornwallis, of Eye, co. Suffolk; Charles, the fifth lord Cornwallis, was created, in 1753, an earl and a viscount; and Charles, the second earl before-mentioned, was raised to the dignity of a marquis in 1792. The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Cornwallis, marquis and earl Cornwallis, viscount Broome, lord Cornwallis, of Eyc, and a baronet. The eldest son bears the title of viscount Broome.

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth sable, gutty d'Eau on a fess argent, three Cornish choughs proper, for Cornwallis; second or, a chief indented azure, a crescent gules for difference, for Butler; third gules, three covered cups argent, also for Butler.

Crest. On a wreath a mount vert, and thereon a stag regardant lodged argent, attired or, having about his neck a laurel proper.

Supporters. Two stags argent, attired and gorged as the crest.

Motto. "Virtus vincit invidiam."

CORCEBUS (Myth.) a Phrygian, son of Mygdon and Anaxamena, assisted Priam, and is said to have been killed by Pyrrhus or Diomedes. Paus. l. 10; Serv. in Virg. Æn. l. 2.

CORCEBUS, a hero of Argolis, who killed a serpent called Pæne, sent by Apollo to be revenged on Argos. Paus. l. 1.

CORCEBUS (Biog.) a courser of Elis, who gained the prize at Olympia, and was killed by Neoptolemus.

CORONEA (Geog.) a town of Bæotia, built by Coronus, son of Thersander, near which Agesilaus defeated the allied army of Athens, Thebes, Corinth, and Argos, in the first year of the Corinthian war, A. C. 394. Diodor. l. 12; C. Nep. in Ages.; Plol. l. 3; Paus. l. 9.

CORONEL, Paul (Biog.) an ecclesiastic of Segovia, who died in 1534, had a share in the Polyglott Bible of Cardinal Ximene, and also made an addition to the work of Nicholas de Lira, 'De Translationum Differentiis.'

CORONELLI, Vincent (Biog.) a geographer of Venice, where he died in 1718, published upwards of 30 volumes, most of them in folio; among which are, 1. 'Atlante Veneto,' 4 vols. fol. Venice, 1691. 2. 'Ritratti de Celebri Personagge dell' Accademia Cosmografica,' &c. fol. Venice, 1697. 3. 'Specchio del Mare Mediterraneo,' fol. ibid. 1698. 4. 'Bibliotheca Universalis,' of which, according to Moreri, only 7 vols. fol. were published, although other authors make the number greater.

CORONIS (Myth.) a daughter of Phlegias, beloved by Apollo, by whom she is said to have had a child; and afterwards to have been killed for her infidelity.

CORRADINI, de Sezza, Peter Marcellinus (Ecc.) a cardinal, who was created by Innocent XII, died in 1743, leaving, 1. 'De Civitate et Ecclesia Settina,' 4to. Rom. 1702. 2. 'Vetus Latium,' &c. 2 vols. fol. Rom. 1704, 1707; and 4 vols. 4to. 1727. A third work, entitled 'De Jure Precum Primarium,' 1707, under the assumed name of Conradus Oligenius, is also ascribed to him.

CORREA, de Sa Salvador (Hist.) a Spanish admiral, was born at Cadiz in 1594, and, after having signalized himself in the service of Philip IV, of Spain, and also of John IV, of Portugal, was imprisoned and exiled by the latter on a charge of maladministration in South America, but was restored to his honours by Alphonso VI before he died in 1686.

CORREGIO, Jerome de' (Ecc.) of the noble family of Corregio, a town of Modena, was placed by Pius IV in the number of the cardinals in 1561; appointed to the archbishopric of Tarentum in 1569; sent by Pius V to fortify the maritime places in the marquisate of Ancona against the Turks, who threatened to make a descent there; and, after having executed his commission with fidelity, he died in 1572.

CORREGIO, Antonio de' (Biog.) a celebrated painter of Corregio, whose family name was Allegi, died in 1513 at the age of 40. His 'Assumption of the Virgin,' on the cupola of the cathedral at Parma, has long been the admiration of every person of good taste. [Vide Plate XXXV]

CORREUS (Hist.) a general of the Bellovaci, an ancient people of Gaul, who refused quarter while fighting against Cæsar, and died with arms in his hands. Hist. Comm. l. 8.

CORRY (Her.) the family name of the earl of Belmore, a title conferred on Armar Corry, in 1797, who had been previously raised to the dignities of viscount Belmore in 1789, and baron Belmore, of Castle Coote, in 1781.

CORRY, Viscount, the title borne by the eldest son of the earl of Belmore.

CORSETTO, Petro (Hist.) a nobleman of Palermo, who was three times judge of Palermo, and one of the Privy Council to the king of Spain, re-established the academy at Accisi, which he entitled Reaccisi, and died in 1643. He wrote, 1. 'Propugnatio Vectigalis Asportantibus Sericum Messanae Portæ indicti.' 2. 'Problema Politicum,' &c.

CORSI, Dominic Maria (Ecc.) a noble Florentine, was born in 1637, created cardinal by Innocent XI in 1686, and died in 1697.

CORSICA (Geog.) an island in the Mare Ligusticum, or that part of the Mediterranean situated between the coast of Genoa and the island. Its principal cities formerly were Aleria and Mariana; those at present are Ajaccio, Nebio, Calvi, Corti, Bonifacio, &c. There are five bishops' sees; namely, Ajaccio, Aleria, Sagona, Mariana, and Nebio. Its principal rivers are the Liamon and the Tavignan, which have their source in the Lake of Crena; the Capo Corso, or Punta di Morono, is the Sacrum Promontorium of the ancients. It abounded in honey, but not of the best sort. Mart. l. 9, ep. 27.

Hylæis apibus Corsica mella dabit.

Ovid. Amor. l. 1, el. 12.

Melle sub infami Corsica mittit apis.

Its inhabitants were characterised as robbers and liars.

Senec. Consol. ad Helv. 8.

Lex prima ulsciri, lex altera vivere rapto,

Tertia mentiri, quarta negare Deos.

From their predatory character the name of corsair is supposed to be derived.

History of Corsica.

Corsica was called by the Greeks Cyrrnos, from Cymus, a son of Hercules; and Corsica, its Latin name, from Corsa Bubulca, as is said, a woman of Liguria, who was the leader of a colony thither. The Tuscans first made themselves masters of the island; after which it came successively into the hands of the Carthaginians and Romans; by which latter people, under Scipio, the town of Aleria was taken, U. C. 495, A. C. 259. In the time of Pliny it was in a flourishing state, having as many as 23 towns, a number far exceeding its present population. The Saracens made a fruitless attempt to take it in the eighth century; and the Genoese and Pisans contended for some time for the possession, which at length was yielded to the former. The French, in 1553, became masters of a great part of the island, but restored it again at the peace in 1559. In 1736 the Corsicans, instigated by a German adventurer, named baron Theodore von Neuhof, attempted to shake off the Genoese yoke, but were frustrated by the interference of France; another attempt was made in 1741, and though aided by the co-operation of England, was not more successful. In 1758 they chose the celebrated Paoli for their general, who compelled the Genoese, after a successful warfare, to sell the sovereignty of the island to France; but the contest being continued with various success, the French were at length expelled, and Corsica became united to the British crown in 1794; until in consequence of the machinations of their countryman Buonaparte, the Corsicans determined on returning once more, to their allegiance to France, the English troops evacuated the island in 1796, and the French were left in the undisturbed possession of it, which they have retained ever since. Strab. l. 2; Mel. l. 2; Plin. l. 3; *Dio. COSMO (Hist.) a name common to some of the Medici family.

Cosmo I, son of John de Medici, was born in 1519, succeeded Alexander de Medici as duke of Florence; and, after having distinguished himself by his skill in government, and his patronage of literature, died in 1574. He was unhappy in his family, having, in a fit of passion, stabbed his son John, who had been the murderer of his brother Garcia; in consequence of which the mother was so affected with the tragic scene that she died of grief a few days after.

Cosmo II, grandson of the preceding, succeeded in 1609, and died in 1621, after having contributed to the happiness of his people by the practice of all the virtues of a wise and good prince.

Cosmo III, son of Ferdinand II, succeeded in 1670, and died in 1723, after a reign of 54 years.

COSMUS I (Ecc.) patriarch of Constantinople, and originally of Jerusalem, succeeded John Xiphilinus in 1075, and governed this church till 1081.

Cosmus II, succeeded Michael in 1146, and died 10 months after.

Cosmus, or Cosmo, a priest, who, being taken by the Saracens in the eighth century, and carried to Damascus, was ransomed.

saved by S. John Damascenus, who entrusted the education of his son to him. He composed several hymns, which are in the 'Bibliotheca Patrum,' and part of the odes, which are in the 'Triodum' of the Greeks. Baron. Annal. ann. 334.

Cosmus (Biog.) a Greek author, who wrote the Life of S. Chrysostom.

COSSART, Gabriel (Biog.) a Jesuit of Pontoise, who died in 1674, published, in conjunction with Father Labbe, the collection of 'Councils,' which he completed in 1672, from the 11th to the 18th volume, after the death of the latter.

COSSE (Hist.) the name of a noble family of Brissac, which has produced several illustrious individuals.

Cosse, Charles de, a Marshal of France, otherwise called Marshal de Brissac, distinguished himself in the wars of Italy and Piedmont, at the siege of Perpignan in 1541, and on different other occasions, for which he was made marshal of France by Henry II; and, after being sent on an embassy to Charles V, died in 1563. Paul. Juv. Thuan. Hist.; Brantome Mem.; P. Anselme, &c.

Cosse, Arthur de, brother of the preceding, and also marshal of France, known by the name of Marshal de Cosse, obtained this distinction by his military skill and valour, which he displayed against the Calvinists, and other enemies of France.

Cosse, Timoleon de, son of Charles de Cosse, commonly called Le Comte de Brissac, early displayed his attachment to a military life, and gave great promises of his future worth at the siege of Rochelle, and elsewhere, when he was unfortunately killed in 1569, at the siege of Mucidan, aged 26. Thuan. Hist. l. 54; Vicanton. Mem.; Davila, l. 4, &c.

Cosse, Charles II, de, duke of Brissac, and younger brother of the preceding, maintained the reputation of his family, and increased its honours by his military services, during the war of the league, in which he was on the side of the Guises. In 1621 he was at the siege of S. John d'Angeli, and died the same year.

Cosse, Philip, or Philibert, de (Ecc.) brother of Charles and Arthur de Cosse, was raised to the episcopal see of Contances in 1530, and died in 1548, high in favour with king Louis.

COSSUS (Hist.) a branch of the family of the Cornelii, who distinguished themselves particularly in the early periods of the republic.

Cossus, A. Cornelius, a military tribune with consular power, killed Tolumnius, the king of the Veii, in battle, U. C. 318, A. C. 434, and afterwards being created dictator, he obtained a triumph over the Volsci and Equi. Liv. l. 4, c. 6.

Cossus, P. Cornelius, several times a military tribune with consular power, and once dictator, conquered the Volsci, and destroyed a fort at the Lacus Fucinus. Liv. l. 4.

Cossus, Cn. Cornelius, several times military tribune, and once consul, laid waste the country of Capena. Liv. l. 5, &c.

COSSUTIANUS (Hist.) the name of an informer in the reign of Tiberius, was condemned for bribery, but pardoned by the emperor. Tacit. Annal. l. 11, 13, &c.

COSSUTII (Hist.) the name of a Roman family, of which was Cosutia, the wife of Julius Cæsar. Sueton. in Cæs.

COSTA (Hist.) the name of an illustrious family of Portugal. Costa, Dom. Jean da, a grandee of Portugal, signalised himself against the Moors, and also against the Spaniards, in the service of John IV, and afterwards was sent on an embassy to France; but on the accession of Alphonso VI, he was banished through the intrigues of his enemies, and died on his return from exile in 1664.

COSTA, Anthony Rodrigues da, of Setuval, in Estremadura, was born in 1656, sent as ambassador to Vienna to conduct the archduchess Maria-Anne to Portugal on her marriage with the prince of Brazil, and, after holding many other posts, died in 1732.

COSTA, Georges da (Ecc.) though born of mean parentage, rose by his merit to be archbishop of Lisbon; and, after going as ambassador to the king of Castille from Alphonsus V, of Portugal, was created cardinal by Sextus IV in 1476, and died in 1508.

COSTANZO, Angelo di (Biog.) of a noble family of Naples, was born in 1507, and died in 1590, leaving 'Istoria del Regno di Napoli,' &c. fol. Aquila, 1581, 4to. Venice, 1710, 4to. Naples, 1735; besides his poems in Latin and Italian, which latter were published in 1709, 1723, 1728, &c.

COSTARD, George (Biog.) an English divine of Shrewsbury, was born in 1710, educated at Oxford, where he took his degree of A. M. in 1733, and died in 1782, leaving, 1. 'A Letter to Martin Folkes, Esq. President of the Royal Society, concerning the Rise and Progress of Astronomy amongst the Ancients,' &c. 8vo. 1746. 2. 'A Farther Account of the Rise and Progress of Astronomy,' &c. 8vo. 1748. 3. 'Dissertationes II Critico-Sacræ,' &c. Oxon. 1752. 4. A new edition of Hydes' 'Historia Religionis Veterum Persarum,' &c. 4to. Oxon. 1760. 5. 'The Use of Astronomy in History and Chronology,' &c. 4to. 1764. 6. 'The History of Astronomy,' &c. 4to. 1767. 7. 'Astronomical and Philological Conjectures on a Passage in Homer,' &c. 4to. 1768. 8. 'A Letter to Nathaniel Brassey Halhed, Esq. containing some Remarks on his Preface to the Code of Gentoo Laws,' 8vo. 1778.

COSTE, Hillario de (Biog.) a Minime friar, of a noble family of Dauphiny, was born in 1595, and died in 1661, leaving, among other things, 1. 'Hist. Catholique ou sont Ecrites toutes les Vies, Faits, &c. des Hommes et des Dames Illustres du 16me et 17me Siecle,' fol. 1625. 2. 'Les Eloges et les Vies des Princesses et Dames Illustres,' 2 vols. 4to. 1647. 3. 'Les Eloges de nos Rois et des Enfants de France qui ont été Dauphins,' 4to. 1643. 4. 'Le parfait Ecclesiastique, ou la Vie de François le Picart, Docteur de Paris, avec les Eloges de 40 autres Docteurs de la Faculté,' 8vo. 1658.

COSTE, Peter, a protestant of Uzez, who died in 1746, left Translations of Locke on the Understanding, 4to. Amsterdam, 1786; of Trevoux, 4 vols. 12mo.; of Newton's Optics, 4to.; and Locke's Reasonableness of Christianity, 2 vols. 8vo.; besides an edition of Montaigne's Essays, 3 vols. 4to., and 10 vols. 12mo.; and of Fontaine's Fables, 12mo.

COSTER, Lawrence (Biog.) or Lawrenz Janz Koster, a printer of Haerlem, was, according to the Dutch, the inventor of that art, about the year 1430; but this point has been obstinately disputed in favour of Mentz, where this art is said to have been first exercised 130 years earlier.

COSTES (Biog.) vide Calprenede.

COSTOBARUS (Hist.) a native of Idumæa, who married Salome, the sister of Herod the Great, was made governor of Idumæa, and afterwards put to death by his order. Joseph. Ant. l. 15.

COSTOBARUS and SAUL, two Jews, of an illustrious family, who had both held the high-priesthood; after finding every endeavour fruitless to keep the people from rebelling against the Romans, they surrendered themselves to the army of Cestius. Joseph. de Bell. Jud. l. 2.

COTELERIUS, John Baptist (Biog.) bachelor of the Sorbonne, and Greek professor in the Royal Academy at Paris, was born at Nîmes in 1627, and died in 1686, leaving, 1. 'Patres Apostolici,' &c. 2 vols. fol. Paris, 1672. 2. 'Monumenta Ecclesiæ Græcæ,' 3 vols. fol. 1675, 1681—1686; besides 9 folio volumes of MSS. in the Imperial Library.

COTES, Roger (Biog.) a mathematician and astronomer of Burbach, in Leicestershire, was born in 1682, educated at Cambridge, taking his degrees of B. A. and A. M. in 1706 and in 1716. He published at Cambridge in 1713 the second edition of sir Isaac Newton's Principia, besides his 'Harmonia Mensurarum,' 4to. Cantab. 1722.

COTES, Francis, an English artist, who was one of the founders of the Royal Academy, died in 1770, aged 45. He was particularly eminent for his portraits in crayons.

COTIN, Charles (Biog.) a member of the French Academy, who died in 1682, was satirized by Boileau, and also by Moliere, in his 'Femmes Savantes,' under the name of Tryssotin. He wrote, among other things, 1. 'Theoclée, ou la vraie Philosophie,' &c. 2. 'Traité de l'Ame Immortelle.' 3. 'Poesies Chrétiennes,' 12mo. 1668, &c.

COTISO (Hist.) a king of the Daci, whose army was defeated by Corn. Lentulus, the lieutenant of Augustus. Plin. l. 4; Sueton. in Aug.; Dio. l. 51.

COTOLENDI, Charles (Biog.) an advocate in the parliament of Paris, and a native of Aix in the 18th century, published, 1. 'Voyages de Pierre Texeira,' &c. translated from the Spanish, 2 vols. 12mo. Paris, 1681. 2. 'Vie de la Duchesse de Montmorenci,' 8vo. Paris, 1684. 3. 'Vie de Christophe Colomb,' 2 vols. 12mo. Paris, 1681, &c.

COTTA, M. Aurelius (Hist.) consul with Lucullus, was defeated by sea and land by Mithridates. He was the opponent of Marius. Cic. in Verr. v. 18; Plut. in Lucull.

CORTA, L., was accused by Scipio Africanus Minor, but defended by Q. Metellus, and acquitted.

COTTA, John (Biog.) a Latin poet of Verona, was born in 1483, and died in 1511. Several of his epigrams, &c. are printed in the collection entitled, 'Carmina Quinque Poetarum,' 8vo. Venet. 1548.

COTTEREL, Sir Charles (Hist.) master of the requests to Charles II, who had shared in the sufferings and exile of his royal master, was succeeded in his office by Charles Lodowick Cotterel, esq.; since which this office has been long in this family. Sir Charles translated from the French 'Cassandra, the famed Romance,' which has been frequently reprinted; and had a principal hand in translating from the Italian 'Duvila's History of the Wars of France.'

COTTERELL (Her.) the name of a family of Hertford, which at present enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred on sir John Geers Cotterell in 1805. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth or; second argent, two escallops in fesse sable; third argent, an escallop sable; over all a cross engrailed per pale sable and gules, debased with a bend of the third.

Crest. An armed man embowed proper, holding an escutcheon (by the top) argent, thereon a talbot's head sable, collared and chained or.

Motto. "Non rapui, sed recipi."

COTTINGTON, Francis Lord (Hist.) fourth son of Philip Cottington, of Godmonston, in Somersetshire, was sent as ambassador into Spain by Charles I, and after serving his master in the office of Lord Treasurer, was again sent into Spain on an embassy, where he died in 1649.

COTTINGTON, Lord (Her.) the title conferred on the above-mentioned nobleman in 1631, which became extinct at the death of his nephew, Francis Cottington, in 1653.

COTTON, Sir John, Bart. (Hist.) of the Cambridge family, mentioned under Heraldry, was high sheriff in the county of Cambridge when the rebellion broke out, and he proclaimed the earl of Essex a traitor. He also took up arms for his sovereign, and was entrusted to carry the plate of the University of Cambridge to the king at Oxford, which he safely delivered, through many difficulties, being followed by a body of Cromwell's horse. He was soon after obliged to leave his country for his loyalty, and died about 1690.

CORRON, Sir Robert Bruce, a distinguished antiquary, and son of Thomas Cotton, esq. the descendant of an ancient family, probably the same as that of the preceding, sir John Cotton; was born at Denton, co. Huntingdon, in 1570; educated at Cambridge, where he took his degree of A.B. in 1585; was created a knight by James I on his accession, and a baronet in 1611; being the thirty-sixth on the list of those advanced to this new dignity. He afterwards entangled himself in the party politics of the stormy reign of Charles I, for which he was arrested and imprisoned, and died shortly after his release in 1631. His memory will be held in more esteem by the lovers of learning, for the munificent donation of the library, distinguished by the name of the Cotton library, consisting solely of rare and valuable MSS., which were deposited in the British Museum in 1753. He wrote, besides political pamphlets which do him no honour, 1. 'A short View of the long Life and Reign of Henry III, King of England,' 4to. 1627; reprinted in 'Cottoni Posthuma.' 2. 'A Narrative of Count Gondomar's Transactions during his Embassy in England,' 4to. London, 1659. 3. 'Of Antiquity, Etymology,' &c. all printed in 'Hearne's Discourses.'

COTTON (Her.) or Coton, the name of a family of Saxon origin, who appear from records to have been seated in the county of Salop since the Norman conquest. Of this family is sir Stapleton Cotton, a gallant officer who, for his brilliant services as second in command of the army under the great duke of Wellington at the battle of Salamanca, was advanced to the dignity of the peerage in 1814, by the title of baron Combermere, of Combermere, co. Chester. [Vide Combermere]

COTTON, the name of a family, so called from Cotton, a manor in the county of Cambridge, which at present enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1641 on the loyal sir John Cotton. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Sable, a chevron between three griffins' heads erased argent.

Crest. A griffin's head erased, as in the arms.

Motto. "Fidelitas vincit."

COTTON, Peter (Biog.) a Jesuit of Neronde, near the Loire, was born in 1564, and died in 1626, leaving, among other things, 'L'Institution Catholique,' 2 tom. fol. He was confessor to Henry IV, and distinguished himself for his zeal in converting heretics.

COTTON, Charles, a poet, and son of Charles Cotton, esq. of Beresford, in Staffordshire, was born in 1630, and died in 1687. Besides his translations from the French, he wrote, 1. 'A Voyage to Ireland,' a burlesque poem, in three cantos, 1670. 2. 'Scarronides, or Virgil Travestic,' &c. 1678; to which was afterwards added 'Burlesque upon Burlesque,' &c. 3. 'The Wonders of the Peak,' 1681. 4. 'An Elegie on the Lord Hastings,' in the 'Lacrymæ Musarum,' published on that nobleman's death, 8vo. London, 1649. 5. 'Instructions how to Angle for a Trout, or Grayling in a clear Stream,' published as a supplement to Walton's 'Complete Angler.'

COTTON, Nathaniel, a physician and poet, who died in 1788, left, among other things, 'Visions in Verse,' published in 1751, 1764, and frequently since. A complete collection of his works, in prose and verse, was published in 2 vols. 12mo. 1791.

COTYS (Myth.) a son of Manes, by Calirrhoe, who succeeded his father on the throne of Macedonia.

CORRS (Hist.) a king of Paphlagonia, who formed an alliance with Agesilaus, king of Sparta. Plut. in Agesil.

Corrs, a king of Thrace, cotemporary with Philip, king of Macedon, who, after a cruel reign of 24 years, was killed by a man of the name of Python. Athen. l. 12.

CORRS, a king of Thrace, who assisted Pompey. Cæs. de Bell. Civ. l. 3; Luc. l. 5.

CORRS, son of Rhematalees, king of Thrace, reigned, by desire of Augustus, conjointly with his uncle Rhescuporis, who on the death of the latter put his nephew to death. He it was to whom Ovid addressed some elegies, among which one of the twelfth book commences—

*Regia progenies, cui nobilitatis origo
Nomen ab Eumolpi pervenit usque, Coty.*

Vel. Paterc. l. 2; Tacit. Annal. l. 2 &c.

CORRS, son of the preceding, after sharing Thrace with his cousin Rhematalees, was obliged by Caligula to yield it to the latter in exchange for a part of Armonia Minor.

CORRS, brother of Mithridates, was placed on the throne of Bosphorus by Claudius, in the place of the latter, who was suspected of intending to revolt.

CORRS, another king of Bosphorus, whose death Arian attributes to the emperor Adrian.

CORRS (Numis.) some medals are extant, bearing the inscriptions, ΚΟΤΥΟΣ—ΒΑΣΙΛΕΥΣ ΚΟΤΥΣ; and on some a head crowned with a diadem; but to which of the above-mentioned kings they refer is not certain.

COTYTTO (Myth.) the goddess of debauchery. Hor. Epod. 17; Strab. l. 10; Juv. Sat. 2.

COUCI (Hist.) the name of an illustrious family, which is derived from Couci, a manor, in Picardy.

Couci, Raoul de, attended king Philip Augustus to the Holy Land, and was killed in 1191.

Couci, Enguerran de, distinguished himself in the service of Philip Augustus, and Louis VIII, but was afterwards in alliance with Henry III of England, and died in 1242.

COUDRETTE, Christopher (Biog.) an ecclesiastic, who died in 1774, wrote the 'History of the Jesuits,' 4 vols. 12mo. 1761.

COVEL, John (Biog.) an English divine of Honing's-heath, in Suffolk, was born in 1638; educated at Cambridge; appointed chaplain to the embassy at Constantinople in 1679; and died Master of Christ College, Cambridge, in 1722. He wrote 'Some Account of the present Greek Church; with Reflections on their present Doctrine and Discipline, particularly in the Eucharist,' &c. fol. Cambridge, 1722.

COVENTRY, John (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, sheriff of London in 1416, is much commended by our chroniclers Stow and others for his discreet carriage in the dispute between Humphry, duke of Gloucester, and Henry Beaufort, bishop of Winchester.

COVENTRY, Thomas, Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England, was born in 1578, and, passing through the gradations of office, was advanced to the eminent post of Lord Keeper, after the skilful and faithful discharge of which for the space of 14 years he died in 1639.

COVENTRY, Sir John, eldest son of the preceding by his second marriage, was attacked in the night by four gentlemen, in consequence of a disrespectful speech which he threw out in parliament against king Charles II. This attempt gave rise to the act, distinguished by the name of the Coventry Act, for 'Preventing Malicious Maiming and Wounding;' by which the persons so offending are to suffer death. He died unmarried; and endowed an hospital at Wiveliscomb, in Somersetshire, for twelve poor people.

COVENTRY, Henry, third son of the Lord Keeper, distinguished himself for his loyalty during the rebellion; and at the restoration he went as ambassador extraordinary to Breda, where, with Denzil, lord Hollis, he concluded a peace with France, Denmark, and the States General. He went twice on an embassy to Sweden, and on those occasions, as on every other, he acted with such wisdom that, as lord Clarendon says, "he was beloved by every body." On his return from his embassy his majesty reluctantly complied with his request to be permitted to resign his office as principal Secretary of State, and died in his retirement in 1686, in the 68th year of his age.

COVENTRY, Sir William, youngest son of the Lord Keeper, left the kingdom during the usurpation, and was afterwards appointed secretary to the duke of York, and also secretary to the admiralty; but quarrelling with the duke of Buckingham, with whom he fought a duel, he was forbid the court, and died in his retirement in 1686, not honoured like his brother. He wrote 1. 'England's Appeal from the Private Cabal at Whitehall to the Great Council of the Nation,' &c. 4to. Lond. 1673. 2. 'The Character of a Trimmer,' ibid. 1689, second edition.

COVENTRY (Her.) a family of whom honourable mention is made in History, particularly of Thomas Coventry, the Lord Keeper, who was advanced to the dignity of a baron of this realm in 1628; and his eldest son, Thomas, the second lord, was farther advanced in 1697 to the dignity of an earl and viscount. The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow: Titles. Coventry, earl of Coventry, viscount Deerhurst, and lord Coventry, of Croome, co. Worcester. The title of the eldest son, viscount Deerhurst.

Arms. Sable, a fess ermine, between three crescents or.

Crest. On a wreath a garb or, and thereon a dunghill-cock perched gules, comb, wattles, and legs or.

Supporters. Two eagles, wings expanded argent, membered and beaked or.

COVENTRY, Francis (Biog.) eldest son of Thomas Coventry, esq. of the above-mentioned family, was educated at Cambridge, and died in 1752, leaving, 'Penhurst,' a poem, 1750; reprinted in Dodsley's Collection.

COVENTRY (Geog.) a town of Warwickshire, in England, 18 m. S. E. Birmingham, 49 N. W. Oxford, and 91 N. W. London. Lon. 1° 30' W. lat. 52° 24' N. Coventry is a town of considerable antiquity, although not a place of any consideration in the time of the Romans. Its prosperity was principally owing to the foundation of a monastery in the time of Edward the Confessor; through the pious munificence of Leofric, earl of Mercia; and his countess, Godiva, who is said to have gained some exemptions for this place from her lord, by riding naked through the town, according to the condition he prescribed. In the reigns of Edward III and Richard III the town was encompassed with walls; where, in 1404, a parliament was held. Queen Elizabeth was also entertained in this place; where, for a short time, Mary, the unfortunate queen of Scots, was confined. During the rebellion Coventry was among the disloyal places, for which its walls were rased to the ground by order of Charles II.

COVERDALE, Miles (Ecc.) bishop of Exeter in the reign of Edward VI, was born in Yorkshire in 1487; ejected from his see by queen Mary; retired to Denmark during her reign; and died about 1566 or 1565, leaving, 1. 'A Faithful and True Prognostication upon the Year 1548,' &c. translated from the German, 8vo. 1536, 1548, and often reprinted. 2. Translation of 'Luther's Exposition of the Twenty-third Psalm,' 16mo. 1537. 3. 'The Old Faith,' 16mo. 1541, and 1547. 4. A translation of Bullinger's 'Christian State of Matrimony,' 8vo. 1541, 1543, and 1552. 5. An abridgement of Erasmus' 'Enchiridion Militis Christiani,' 12mo. 1545. 6. A translation of the Epistles to the Romans, Corinthians, and Galatians, in the second volume of the 'Paraphrase of Erasmus on the New Testament,' fol. 1549. 7. Translation of 'The Hope of the Faithful,' &c. 16mo. 1579; and of 'The Booke of Death; or how a Christian Man ought to behave himself in the Danger of Death,' &c. 16mo. 1579. 8. 'Declaration of the Order that the Churches in Denmark, and many other places in Germany, do use, not only at the Holy Supper, but also at Baptisme,' 16mo. printed abroad, no date; beside the part which he took in the translation of what is called 'Cranmer's Bible;' and also in that entitled the 'Geneva Bible.'

COULON, Lewis (Biog.) an historian and Jesuit of Poitou, was born in 1605, and died in 1664, leaving, 1. 'Traité Historique des Rivières de France,' 2 vols. 8vo. Paris, 1644. 2. An enlarged edition of the 'Trésor de l'Histoire de France, de Gilles Corrozet,' 8vo. 1645. 3. 'L'Histoire Universelle du Royaume de la Chine,' 4to. 1645, translated from the Italian of Alvarez Sernedo. 4. 'L'Introducteur en la Cosmographie,' supposed to have been composed by M. Renti. 5. A translation of M. Turselin's 'Histoire Universelle,' 2 vols. 8vo. 1647. 6. An enlarged edition of 'Voyages de Vincent de Blanc,' 4to. 1648, and 1658. 7. A translation of Platina's 'Vies des Papes;' with the continuation of Onuphrius, Ciaconius, and others, besides himself; 4to. 1651. 8. 'Histoire des Vies des Papes,' 12mo. 1656; an original work, often reprinted since. 9. 'Harmonie des Evangelistes sur la Passion de notre Seigneur,' &c. 12mo. 1643. 10. 'Lexicon Homericum,' 8vo. 1643. 11. 'Histoire des Juifs,' 3 vols. 12mo. 1665; two only of which were written by Coulon, the third by his friend, father Comte.

COUPLET, Philip (Ecc.) a Jesuit, and a missionary to China, who was born at Malines, and died on his passage a second time to that country, left, 1. 'Historia Candida Hin, Christiana Sincensis,' translated into French, 1683. 2. 'Catalogus Patrum Societatis Jesu, qui post Obitum Sancti Francisci Xaverii, ab Anno 1581 usque ad Annum 1681,' &c. 8vo. Paris, 1686; and 4to. Diling. 1687. 3. 'Tabula Chronologica Monarchiæ Sinicæ,' &c. fol. Paris. 1686. 4. 'Confucius Sinarum Philosophus,' &c. Paris. 1687.

COURAYER, Peter Francis (Biog.) an ecclesiastic of Vernon, in Normandy, was born in 1681, and died in 1776, leaving, 1. 'Dissertation sur la Validité des Ordinations des Anglois,' &c. 2 vols. 8vo. Brussels, 1723; and translated into English; 'A Defence of the Validity of the English Ordinations,' &c. 2. 'Défense de la Dissertation sur la Validité des Ordinations des Anglois contre les différentes Réponses qui y ont été faites,' &c. 4 vols. 12mo. 1726; translated into English, 2 vols. 8vo. under the title of 'A Defence of the Dissertation, &c.' 3. 'Relation Historique et Apologetique des Sentimens et de la Conduite du P. le Courayer,' &c. 2 vols. 12mo. 1729. 4. A translation in French of Futher Paul's 'History of the Council of Trent,' 2 vols. fol. London, 1730; and 2 vols. 4to. Amsterdam; and also of Sleidan's 'History of the Reformation,' 3 vols. 4to. 1767. After his death was published, 'Déclaration de mes derniers Sentimens sur les différens Dogmes de la Religion, par feu Pierre Francois le Courayer, Docteur en Théologie,' 8vo. 1787; an English translation of which has been since published.

COURCY, Sir John (Hist.) of the noble family mentioned under Heraldry, having served king Henry II in his wars of England and Gascoigne, for the space of two years, was sent into Ireland in 1177, where, with a handful of men, he invaded Ulster, being the first of the English that entered that province, and, after performing prodigies of valour, he reduced Ulster to the obedience of Henry II; who, in 1181, created him earl thereof. He was afterwards deprived of his dignity and government by king John, and died in 1210, leaving the reputation of being a man of prodigious strength and courage. This sir John Courcy obtained from king John the privilege of being covered in the royal presence; which privilege is enjoyed by the family to this day. COURCY (Her.) Courci, Curci, Curzi, Courcei, &c. the name of a family which settled in Ireland, in the time of sir John Courcy before-mentioned; and derive their descent in the male line from the house of Lorraine, of the race of Charlemagne. Robert de Courcy, a descendant of this family, was lord of Courci, in Normandy, in 1026; and his son Richard accompanied William, duke of Normandy, into England, and for his services at the battle of Hastings, received from the conqueror, among other lordships, that of Stoke, in the county of Somerset, which, from its lord, was called Stoke Courcy. His son Robert succeeded him as lord of Courci, in Normandy, and baron of Stoke Courcy in 1098. His great grandson, Sir John Courcy, was created earl of Ulster in 1181; and his son, Miles Courcy, being kept out of his earldom of Ulster by Hugh de Lacy, received from king John the barony of Kingsale in 1223, which has remained in the family ever since. [Vide Kingsale]

COURT, de Gebelin (Biog.) vide Gebelin.

COURTEN, William (Biog.) the last descendant in the male line of a Dutch family, which fled to England during the troubles under the government of the duke of Alva, was born in 1643, and died in 1702. He made a collection of coins and medals, and also of papers on the subjects of antiquity, which was purchased of the family in 1763, and deposited in the British Museum.

COURTENAY (Hist.) or Courtenai, Josceline de, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, engaged in the crusades, and after serving under his kinsman, Baldwin I, in 1101, and distinguishing himself against the infidels, was made count of Edessa, and died in the litter in which he was carried at the head of his army to meet the enemy in a transport of joy, on finding that the latter had retreated, in 1131.

COURTENAY, Josceline de, son of the preceding, and second count of Edessa, was as much addicted to his ease as his father had been to war; in consequence of which he lost the city of Edessa, of which he had been count; and being afterwards taken prisoner by some thieves, who lay in wait for him at Antioch, he was carried to Aleppo in chains, where he died in 1152.

COURTENAY, Josceline de, third count of Edessa, was a brave warrior in the Holy Land, but the time and place of his death are not known.

COURTENAY, Hugh, eldest son of Hugh Courtenay, commonly called Courtenay le Fitz, a valiant warrior, was at the battle of Crecy, and also at that of Navarre and others, where he distinguished himself, but died in the 48th year of his age, in the lifetime of his father.

COURTENAY, Sir Peter, seventh son of Hugh Courtenay, second earl of Devonshire, and brother of the preceding, was famous for his valour and great skill in arms. He was advanced for his merit to many high posts, and, after being knighted by the Black Prince in consideration of his prowess at the battle of Navarre, in 1361, he died in 1409.

COURTENAY, Edward de, vide Devonshire.

COURTENAY, Edward de, eldest son of the third earl of Devonshire, was at the battle of Agincourt; and, after serving king Henry V with honour to himself, he died a year before his father.

COURTENAY, Sir Hugh, of Boconnock, in Cornwall, son of John, eighth earl of Devonshire, was in the disastrous battle of Tewksbury, on the side of the Lancastrians, and was either slain in the battle, or put to death afterwards.

COURTENAY, Henry, vide Exeter.

COURTENAY, Sir William, commonly surnamed the Great, attended the duke of Suffolk, in 1553, in his expedition to France, and afterwards served the office of sheriff of Devonshire, &c.

COURTENAY, Sir William, a descendant of the preceding, was very young when the rebellion broke out, but he afterwards supported the cause of loyalty, and contributed materially to the restoration by the troops which he raised.

COURTENAY, William de (Ecc.) fourth son of Hugh Courtenay, second earl of Devonshire, and brother of the Hugh Courtenay above-mentioned, was Chancellor of the University of Oxford in 1367; elected bishop of Hereford in 1369; translated to the see of London in 1375; and to the metropolitan see of Canterbury in 1381; and, after conducting himself with much prudence during the stormy reign of Richard II, and with much zeal against the Wickliffites on the one hand and the usurpations of the pope over the prerogative of the crown on the other, he died in 1396.

COURTENAY, Richard, nephew of the preceding, was successively dean of St. Asaph, canon of York, chancellor of the University of Oxford, canon of Wells, and bishop of Norwich, to which he was promoted in 1413. He was one of the ambassadors from king Henry V of England to the king of France, to claim the crown of France as his right by descent, and to denounce war in case of non-compliance; and after attending the king in his first expedition into France, he died in 1415.

COURTENAY, Peter, brother of the preceding, was, after various preferments, raised successively to the sees of Exeter and Winchester, and died in 1491. He was one of the great persons who fled to Henry, earl of Richmond, afterwards Henry VII, and landed with him at Milford. He also built the north tower of the cathedral church of Exeter, and placed in it a great bell, weighing 12,000lb., which, after his name, is called Peter's Bell.

COURTENAY (Her.) the name of a renowned and illustrious house of Courtenay, descended from Athon, son of the Castellain, or governor of the Chateau-Reynard, who was of the same lineage as the dukes of Bologne, among whom was Godfrey, Baldwin I, &c. kings of Jerusalem. One of the ancestors of this Athon was Ricuinus, or Riscuinus, count of Ardenne, and a duke on the Morelle, the fourteenth in paternal descent from Pharamond, founder of the French monarchy in 420. This Athon fortified, in the reign of Robert the Wise, Courtenay a town situate on the banks of the river Chair, in the Isle de France, between Sens on the East, and Montargis on the West, 56 m. S. Paris; and from that place he and his posterity assumed their surname. From Milo de Courtenay, the eldest son of Josceline de Courtenay, and grandson of Athon de Courtenay, descended Reginald de Courtenay, who came to England in the reign of Henry II, and is said to have been the founder of the Courtenay family of Devonshire, although Camden and Dugdale, on the authority of the old register of Ford Abbey, derive their descent from prince Floris, second son of Peter, and grandson of Lewis the Fat, which Peter, having married Elizabeth, the daughter of the fore-mentioned Reginald, was undeniably the founder of the branch of the illustrious family of Courtenay, or Courtenai, in France. Reginald de Courtenay, having married Hawise, daughter and sole heir to Robert de Abrineis, or Awerinches, hereditary sheriff, or viscount of Devonshire, baron of Ockhampton, and governor of the castle of Exeter, succeeded to his offices and titles in right of his wife; and his great great grandson was summoned to parliament, 9 Ed. III, as the earl of Devonshire. Henry, the eleventh earl of Devonshire, was advanced to the dignity and title of marquis of Exeter; but at the death of Edward Courtenay, his son, twelfth earl of Devonshire, and second marquis of Exeter, the titles became extinct. The present honours of the family are derived from Sir William Courtenay, whose ancestor, Philip Courtenay, was sixth son of Hugh de Courtenay, second earl of Devonshire. This sir Philip, who was knighted by Edward, the Black Prince, in Spain, is styled of Powderham Castle, and his descendant, sir William, whose family had already enjoyed the dignity of a baronet, was created a peer in 1762, by the style and title of viscount Courtenay, of Powderham Castle, co. Devon. The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

CRATYLUS (Biog.) the preceptor to Plato, after Socrates. Diog. in Plat.

CRAVEN, William Earl (Hist.) eldest son of sir William Craven, lord mayor, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was devoted to arms from his youth, and signalized himself in Germany, under Gustavus, king of Sweden.

VOL. I.

Although he did not personally serve king Charles I, yet he manifested his loyalty by sending him divers considerable supplies, as also to Charles II; which the king afterwards acknowledged, when he conferred upon him the honour of the peerage. He died in 1697, at the age of 88, after having been, as it is said, privately married to Elisabeth, queen of Bohemia, whose battles he had fought.

CRAVEN (Her.) the name of a family of Yorkshire, of which the first that enjoyed a peerage was John Craven, the eldest son of sir William Craven, lord mayor, who was created a baron by the title of lord Craven, of Ryton, co. Salop, but he dying without issue, the title became extinct. His brother, William Craven before-mentioned, was created in 1626, lord Craven, of Hempstead Marshall, co. Berks; and in 1664 viscount Craven, of Uffington, co. Berks; and earl Craven, of Craven, co. York. These latter titles became extinct at his death, but were revived in the person of William, seventh lord Craven, a descendant from another branch of the same family. The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Craven, earl of Craven, co. York; viscount Uffington and baron Craven, of Hempstead Marshall, co. Berks. The title of the eldest son is viscount Uffington.

Arms. Argent, a fess between six cross-crosslets fitchy gules.

Crest. On a chapeau gules, turned up ermine, a griffon statant of the second, beaked or.

Supporters. Two griffons ermine.

Motto. "Virtus in actione consistit."

CRAUFORD (Her.) the name of an ancient family of Kilberny, co. Stirling, which was originally spelt Crawford. Sir Alexander Crauford, a descendant of this family, was created a baronet in 1781: the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Argent, a buck's head erased gules.

Crest. A buck's head erased, as in the arms, between the attire a cross couped sable.

CRAWFORD, Earl of (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, [vide Lindsay and Cranford] distinguished himself in a tournament at London Bridge in 1390, when he dismounted lord Welles. He was one of the commissioners to treat of peace with England in 1404, and one of the ambassadors extraordinary to that court in 1406. He died about 1412.

CRAWFORD, Alexander, Earl of, son of the preceding, was a negotiator in England in 1414, and afterwards one of the hostages for king James I in 1421. He was slain in 1445, in a conflict between him and Ogilvy, of Inverary.

CRAWFORD, Alexander, third Earl of, gained the battle of Aberbrothwick, where his father was killed, and after being employed as a negotiator, particularly with England, died in 1454.

CRAWFORD, David, fourth Earl of, was also employed in negotiations with England from 1465 to 1485; had the custody of Berwick Castle in 1473; was constituted admiral of the fleet fitted out to reduce the earl of Ross, and died in 1489.

CRAWFORD, David, tenth Earl of, was engaged with the earls of Huntley, Erroll, and Bothwell, in rebellion in 1589, for which they were tried and found guilty, but being afterwards pardoned by the king, the earl of Crawford had a safe conduct to pass through England on his way to France, and died in 1607.

CRAWFORD, Ludovick, fourteenth Earl of, signalized himself during the rebellion, in favour of his sovereign Charles I, for which he suffered both in his person and estate. He continued in arms until the king put himself into the hands of the rebels, when he went into exile in Spain in 1646, and died soon after.

CRAWFORD and Lindsay, John, Earl of, a zealous adherent to Charles I during the rebellion, was very instrumental in bringing about the Restoration, and after filling the office of lord high treasurer of Scotland, he died in 1676, aged 80.

CRAWFORD, William, sixteenth Earl of, and second earl of Lindsay, was a zealous upholder of the Revolution, who, after filling the post of president of the council, died in 1698.

CRAWFORD, John, eighteenth Earl of, and fourth earl of Lindsay, one of the most valiant soldiers of his time, signalized himself in the imperial army against the French and the Turks, and afterwards at the battles of Dettingen, Fontenoy, &c. and died a lieutenant-general in 1749, at the age of 48.

CRAWFORD and Lindsay, Earl of (Her.) this title, which was borne by so many distinguished persons of the name of Lindsay, of whom mention has already been made under History, became extinct or dormant at the death of the twentieth earl of Crawford in 1808; but the earl of Balcarra considers himself entitled to inherit it, being lineally descended from, and the representative of, Alexander, second earl of Crawford. [Vide Lindsay]

CRAWFORD (Biog.) or Cranford, David or Daniel, a Scotch lawyer, of Drumsay, near Glasgow, was born in 1665, and died in 1726, leaving, 1. 'Memoirs of Scotland,' &c. 8vo. 1706. 2. 'Peerage of Scotland.' 3. 'History of the Stuart Family.' The last two, commonly attributed to him, are said to have been written by one George Crawford.

CRAYER, Gaspar de (Biog.) an artist of Antwerp, was born in 1585, and died in 1669. His 'Centurion alighting from his Horse to prostrate Himself at the Feet of Christ,' was highly admired by Rubens.

CREBILLON, Prosper Joliot de (Biog.) called the Æschylus of France, was born at Dijon in 1674, and died in 1762. Of his works, the 'Atreus,' and the 'Rhadamistus,' still keep their place on the stage; but they are all in occasional request in France, where they have passed through numerous editions. [Vide Plate XXX]

CREBILLON, Claude Prosper Joliot de, son of the preceding, was born in 1707, and died in 1779, leaving several Romances, and Tales, &c.; all which were collected in 7 vols. 12mo. 1779.

CRÉECH, Thomas (Biog.) an English poet of Sherbourne, in Dorsetshire, was born in 1659, educated at Oxford, and died by his own hands in 1700. His works consist principally of translations from Lucretius, Horace, Ovid, Persius, Plutarch, Manilius, &c. The Lucretius was published in 8vo. Oxford, 1682; and an edition of the original by himself, with notes, 1695. The translation and original were printed again in 2 vols. 8vo. 1714, 1717, and in 12mo. 1759. The Horace was published in 1684; the Idylliums of Theocritus in 8vo. 1684; the Manilius in 1696.

CREIGHTON, David (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, signalized himself at the age of 18, in the defence of his family seat Crum Castle, co. Fermanagh, with a very inferior force, consisting of his father's tenants and neighbours, against a body of 6000 chosen men of king James II, who, learning that 2000 Enniskilleners were approaching to the relief of the Castle, raised the siege and attempted to retire, but the gallant defender of the Castle making a sally, and placing them between two fires, completely routed them.

CREIGHTON (Her.) a branch of the family of Creighton or Crichton, who were viscounts of Frendraught, in Scotland. Abraham Creighton, grandson of the David Creighton before-mentioned, was created in 1768 baron Erne, of Crum Castle; and his son John was created in 1773 viscount Erne, and earl of Erne in 1789. [Vide Erne]

CREIGHTON, Lord, the title said to be borne by the eldest son of the earl of Erne.

CREIGHTON (Biog.) vide Crichton.

CRELLIUS, John (Biog.) a writer of Franconia, was born in 1590, and died in 1693. His theological works form a considerable part of the works of the 'Fratres Poloni.'

CREMONA (Geog.) a town of Gallia Cisalpina, subsequently called Lombardy, and in modern geography the capital of the Cremonese, in the duchy of Milan, standing in a beautiful plain, about a quarter of a mile from the Po, between the rivers Adda and Aglio, 30 miles N. W. Parma, 38 S. E. Milan. Lon. 10° E. lat. 45° 7' N.

History of Cremona.

Cremona, which is the ancient name of this city, suffered much in the time of Annibal, but still more in the reign of Augustus, because its inhabitants took part with Anthony, whence Virgil says—

Virg. Eclog. 9, v. 28.

Mantua, vix misera nimum vicina Cremona.

Mart. l. 8, ep. 56.

Jugera perdiderat misera vicina Cremona.

It also suffered great hardships in the time of Vitellius; and was afterwards successively subject to the ravages and attacks of the Goths, the Sclavonians, and the Lombards, by which latter it was entirely ruined in 630. It was rebuilt by Frederick Barbarossa in 1284, when it was governed by princes of its own, bearing the title of viscounts. It then fell into the hands of the French, the Venetians, and the dukes of Milan. The French besieged it in 1648, but without success; and in 1702 it was surprized by the Imperialists, under prince Eugene, through an act of treachery; but the garrison, consisting of French and Irish, who held this city for Philip V of Spain, maintained themselves with such extraordinary valour, that the enemy were obliged to retire. In the revolutionary wars this place changed masters with the rest of Lombardy. Cremona is a bishop's see, suffragan of Milan. *Polyb. l. 3; Liv. l. 20; Plin. l. 3, c. 18; Tac. l. 3; Paul. Diacon. The principal towns of Crete were Gnosus, Gortinia, Cydon, Dictynna, or Dictamnus, &c. [Vide Candia]

History of Crete.

Crete was happy under the government of Minos, who left wholesome laws and regulations, that were soon after subverted by democratical usurpers; these caused incessant commotions in the island until it fell under the power of the Romans, A. C. 66, after a war of three years, in which the inhabitants were driven to the utmost straits. After their surrender to Metellus they were, for some time, required only to furnish a certain number of bowmen, and were left to enjoy their own laws. CRETHEIS (Myth.) otherwise called Hippolyte, or Astyadamia. [Vide Astyadamia]

CREUSA (Myth.) a daughter of Creon, king of Corinth. [Vide Glauce]

CREUSA, a daughter of Priam and Hecuba, and wife of Æneas, who was transported from her husband on the night that Troy was taken, and carried by the goddess Cybele to her temple, of which she made her priestess. Virg. Æn. l. 2; Paus. l. 10.

CREUSA, a daughter of Erectheus, king of Athens, and mother of Janus by Apollo.

CREWE, John (Hist.) in the county of Northampton, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, continued faithful to his sovereign during the usurpation, and contributed his best endeavours towards the restoration of his successor, for which he was honoured with the peerage.

CREWE, Nathaniel (Ecc.) fifth son of John, lord Crewe, of Stene, was born in 1633, and educated at Oxford, where he took his degrees of A. B. and A. M. 1655, and 1658, and that of LL. D. in 1663. He was elected bishop of Oxford in 1671, translated to the see of Durham in 1675, and died in 1720, having filled the office of a bishop for fifty years, three months, and two days. He was a great benefactor to Lincoln college, whereof he had been fellow and rector, and laid out large sums in beautifying the palace at Durham.

CREWE (Her.) the name of a family, which was so called from the township of Crewe, in the parish of Barthomley, in Cheshire, where Thomas de Crewe became possessed of a knight's fee in 1288: John Crewe, esq. before-mentioned, his descendant, was for his loyalty created, 13 Charles II, lord Crew, of Stene; which title became extinct in 1721, at the death of Nathaniel, the third lord, who was bishop of Durham, before-mentioned. It was revived in the person of John Crew, of Crew Hall, who was the descendant in the female line of another branch of the family, and was created a baron in 1806; the title, arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Title. Crewe, lord Crewe, of Crewe, in Cheshire.

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth, for Crewe, azure, a lion rampant of the field, armed and langued gules; second and third, for Offley, argent, a cross fleury sable, charged with a lion passant of the field.

CRÆSUS (Hist.) Κραῖσος, son of Alyattes, the last king of Lydia, of the race of the Memnadae, is celebrated in history for his wealth and his misfortunes. He thought himself the happiest of mortals, until he was instructed otherwise by Solon, who declared that no man could be pronounced happy until he was dead. Cræsus felt the force of this truth, and called out frequently on Solon, when, conquered by Cyrus, and stript of his dominions, he was ordered by the victor to be burnt alive. Cyrus, struck with his exclamations, and learning the cause, ordered him to be taken from the burning pile, and admitted him into the number of his friends. Ovid. de Pont. l. 4.

CROFT, Sir Richard (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was at the battle of Tewkesbury, in the time of Edward IV, and took prince Edward, the eldest son of Henry VI, prisoner; whom, upon proclamation and promise of safety for his person, he produced; but he had no hand in the barbarous murder of that prince.

CROFT, Herbert (Ecc.) of the same family as the preceding, was born in 1603, educated at Oxford, and after suffering much for his loyalty, was, at the Restoration, promoted to the see of Hereford, which he chose to retain till his death in 1691. He wrote, 1. 'The Naked Truth, or the True State of the Primitive Church,' 4to. which recommended the Church of England to accommodate itself to the humours of sectarians; and was therefore, though but a small pamphlet, much read and admired. The answers to this pamphlet were not treated so courteously. 2. 'A Letter written to a Friend concerning Popish Idolatry.' 3. 'Legacy to his Diocese,' &c. 4to. besides some Sermons, &c.

CROFT (Her.) the name of a family of Croft Castle, co. Hereford, where it has been seated from time immemorial, and from which, in all probability, the name is derived. Of this family was sir Richard Croft, knight, before-mentioned; from whom descended sir Herbert Croft, son of the bishop, and son of sir Herbert Croft, knight, mentioned under Biography, who was created a baronet in 1671. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly, per fesse indented, azure and argent; in the first quarter a lion passant guardant or.

Crest. A griffin sejant proper.

Motto. "Esse quam videri."

CROFT, of Cowling Hall, co. York, a branch, no doubt, of the same family, which also enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1818 on sir John Croft.

CROFT, Sir Herbert, Knight (Biog.) of Croft Castle, in Herefordshire, was educated at Oxford, knighted by king James I, and died in 1622, in the Roman Catholic persuasion, after having been 50 years a Protestant. He wrote, 1. 'Letters persuasive to his Wife and Children to take upon them the Catholic Religion,' 12mo. Douay, 1619. 2. 'Arguments to show that the Church Communion with the See of Rome is the true Church, against Dr. Field's Four Books of the Church,' 1619. 3. 'Reply to the Answer of his Daughter Mary, which she made to a Paper of his, sent to her concerning the Roman Church,' 12mo. 1619. Three of his sons were colonels in the army of Charles I, the eldest of whom, William, who was knighted, was killed in battle in 1645.

CROFT, William, a musician of Nethercatington, in Warwickshire, was born in 1657, and died in 1727, leaving such a reputation that his memory has been honoured with a monument in Westminster Abbey. He published, 1. 'Divine Harmony,' &c. to which is prefixed 'A brief Account of Church Music,' 1712. 2. 'Musica Sacra,' &c. 2 vols. 1724.

CROFTON (Her.) the name of a family which settled in Ireland in the time of queen Elizabeth, when George Crofton, esq. co. Devon, obtained considerable grants of lands in the counties of Roscommon and Leitrim. His eldest son, sir Edward, was created a baronet in 1661, which became extinct at the death of the sixth baronet, but was revived in 1745, in the person of Marcus Lowther, esq. who having married Catherine Crofton, assumed the name and arms of that family. His son sir Edward married Anne, daughter and sole heiress of Thomas Croker, of Backweston, in Kildare, esq. who was in 1797 created baroness Crofton, of Mote, co. Roscommon.

CROFTON, of Mohill, co. Leitrim, a branch of the above-mentioned family, descended from Henry, fourth son of the above-mentioned George Crofton, esq. which at present enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1801 on sir Morgan Crofton.

CROFTON, Zachary (Biog.) a nonconformist, and son of sir Edward Crofton, baronet, before-mentioned, was ejected from his living of St. Botolph, near Aldgate, after the Restoration, and died in 1672, having engaged warmly in the troubles and mischiefs of the times.

CROFTS, William Lord (Hist.) the lineal descendant of an ancient family of Saxham, in Suffolk, being in the confidential employ of Charles II, was raised to the dignity of the peerage, but died without issue in 1677, when the title became extinct.

CROIUS (Biog.) or De Croi, John, a Protestant clergyman of Usey, in France, who died in 1659, was the author of, 1. 'Augustin Supposé,' &c. 2. 'Specimen Conjecturarum in quædam Origenis Irenæi et Tertulliani Loca,' 1632. 3. 'Observationes Sacre et Historice in Nov. Test.' 1644.

CROKE (Hist.) or Crook, Sir George, third son of sir John Croke, of Buckinghamshire, was born in 1576, educated at Oxford, and after studying law at the Inner Temple, and passing through several offices in that Inn, was created one of the justices of the Common Pleas in 1624, and justice of the King's Bench in 1628, and died in 1641. The 'Reports' of sir George Croke have obtained the greatest authority, and have passed through several editions; those of 1657, 1658, and 1661, are called the first edition; the second of 1669 is in 3 vols. fol.; the third in 1683 or 1685, in 3 vols. fol. was translated and published by his son-in-law, sir Harbottle Grimstone; the fourth and last edition in 4 vols. 8vo. 1790-92. An abridgment of Croke's Reports in three parts, 8vo. was published by William Hughes, esq. in 1685.

CROKE, Richard (Biog.) called in Latin Crocus, a Greek scholar, was born in 1506, and educated at Cambridge; and after teaching Greek at Oxford, he died in 1558, leaving, 1. 'Oratio de Græcarum Discipulorum Laudibus,' 4to. 1519. 2. 'Introductiones ad Græcam Linguam,' 4to. Colonn. 1520. 3. 'In Ausonium: Annotationes.' 4. 'Elementa Gr. Gram.' 5. 'De Verborum Constructione,' &c.

CROMARTY, George Mackenzie, Earl of (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Her. ldr., entered zealously into the cause for bringing about the Restoration, for which he raised forces under the commission of his majesty Charles I; was appointed one of the Lords of Session in 1661; Justice-General of Scotland in 1678; and died Lord Justice-General in 1714, after having heartily concurred in the Union. Among his works as an author are, 1. 'A Vindication of King Robert III, from the Imputation of Bastardy,' 4to. Edinburgh, 1695. 2. 'The mistaken Advantage by raising of Money,' 4to. Edinburgh, 1706. 3. 'Friendly Return to a Letter concerning Sir George Mackenzie's and Sir John Nisbet's Observations and Responses' on the Matter of Union, 4to. Edinburgh, 1706. 4. 'Synopsis Apocalyptica,' &c. 4to. Edinburgh, 1707. 5. 'Historical Account of the Conspiracy of the Earl of Gowrie,' &c. 8vo. Edinburgh, 1713. 6. 'A Vindication of the Same,' &c. 8vo. Edinburgh, 1714.

CROMARTY, George, third Earl of, engaged in the insurrection in 1745, in favour of prince Charles, for whom he raised 400 of his clan, who were with him at the battle. Being surprised and taken prisoner, he was brought before the House of Lords, when he pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to die; but the sentence was not put into execution; and he died in 1766, after having received a pardon, as did also his son.

CROMARTY, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Mackenzie, which was conferred in 1703 on George Mackenzie above-mentioned, who was created lord Macleod and Castlehaven, viscount of Tarbat, and earl of Cromarty. These titles became all extinct at the death of John, lord Macleod. [Vide Mackenzie]

CROMER, Martin (Ecc.) bishop of Varmia, in Poland, after cardinal Hosius, died in 1589, leaving a History of Poland, in 30 books, to the year 550.

CROMWELL, Thomas, Earl of Essex (Hist.) vide Essex.

CROMWELL, Olivier, the regicide, who, after imbruing his hands in the blood of his king, usurped the supreme power of England, under the title of protector; was born of an ancient if not a respectable family in 1599; educated at

Oxford; and after displaying great abilities both in the field and the cabinet, died in 1658, leaving the reputation of a great statesman, but a very bad man, whose talents, if rightly employed, might have rendered him a blessing to his country instead of a curse. [Vide Plate XVIII]

CROMWELL, Richard, son of the preceding, who inherited neither the ambition nor the talent of his father, was contented to resign a power which he could no longer hold, and died in the obscurity which was suited to his condition in 1762, at the age of 40.

CROMWELL (Her.) vide Essex.

CROMWELL, Lord, the title conferred on Gregory Cromwell, son of Thomas, earl of Essex, by which he was summoned to parliament in 1539. His great grandson, Thomas, fourth lord Cromwell, was created in 1625 viscount Lecale, and in 1644 earl of Ardglass. The Irish titles became extinct in 1687, at the death of Vere, seventh lord Cromwell, and fourth earl of Ardglass. The English barony has lain dormant.

CRONSTADT, Axel Frederick (Biog.) a Swedish mineralogist, was born in Sudermania in 1722, and died in 1765. His principal work, well known in England by the title of 'An Essay towards a System of Mineralogy,' was originally published in 1758; and the English translation, by Emanuel da Costa, in 8vo. 1770; and in 2 vols. 8vo. 1788, greatly enlarged.

CROOKE (Hist.) vide Croke.

CROONE (Biog.) vide Croone.

CROSS (Biog.) or de la Cruse, Michael, an English artist in the reigns of Charles I and II, who was particularly eminent in copying paintings. He copied a Madonna of Raphael's, in St. Mark's church, with such correctness that he was enabled to remove the original without immediate detection.

CROSS, Lewis, another painter, who died in 1724, no less skilled in copying than the former. He repainted a little picture of Mary, queen of Scots, which was looked upon as equal to the original.

CROSSE (Biog.) or Cross, John, a Franciscan friar, and chaplain to James II, published, among other things, 'Cynosura, or the Miserere Psalm paraphrased,' 'Divine Poems,' &c.

VOL. I.

CULLUM (Her.) the name of a family seated at Thorndon, in Suffolk, of which mention is made as early as 1454. This family at present enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1660 on sir John Cullum, first cousin to sir Nicholas Crispe, the eminent loyalist. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Azure, a chevron ermine, between three pelicans or, vulning themselves proper.

Crest. A lion sejant or, holding between his paws a column argent, capital and base of the first.

Motto. "Sustineatur."

CULLUM, Sir John, Bart. (Biog.) of the family above-mentioned, was born in 1733, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1785. He wrote, 1. History of the Parish of Hawstead (of which he was lord and patron), and Hardwick-House, which was published as the 23d number of the 'Bibliotheca Topographica Britannica,' and reprinted in 1813, with the addition of seven new plates. He also left some collections for the county of Suffolk, published in Mr. Gough's 'Anecdotes of British Topography,' vol. ii.

CULMUR, Richard (Biog.) a violent fanatic, who was active during the rebellion in defacing the churches, and was ejected from the living of Minster, in Kent, at the Restoration.

CULPEPER, or Culpepper, Sir Thomas, Knt. (Biog.) son of sir Thomas Culpeper, of Hollingbourne, in Kent, knt., was born in 1636, educated at Oxford, and died about the end of the 17th century, leaving, 1. 'Moral Discourses and Essays upon several Subjects,' 8vo. London, 1655. 2. 'Considerations touching Marriage,' 4to. 3. 'A Discourse showing the many Advantages which will accrue to this Kingdom by the Abatement of Usury,' 4to. 1668, which was followed by some other pamphlets on the same subject.

CULPEPPER, Nicholas (Biog.) student in physic and astrology, as he styles himself, was born in London in 1616, and died in 1653. He is well known as the author of the 'Herbal,' which passed through many editions.

CUMÆ (Geog.) a town of Campania or Naples, which, by the Greeks, was called Κύμη, or Κύμαι, and though at present in ruins, retains its ancient name, and is four miles N. W. Pozzuolo. It was founded by a colony from Cumæ, a town of Æolia, before the Trojan war, and is celebrated for a cave which was a residence of one of the Sibyls.

Virg. Æn. l. 3.

*Huc ubi delatus Cumæam accesseris urbem,
Ditinosque lacus, et Averna sonantia silvis,
Insanavi votum adspicere.*

Lucan. l. 5.

Talis in Euboico vates Cumana recessus.

It was also here that Dædalus, after escaping from the prison in Crete, erected a magnificent temple to Apollo. Cuma was taken by the Romans, U. C. 335; and became, on account of its delightful situation, another Baïæ to the citizens of Rome.

Juv. Sat. 3.

*Quamvis digressi veteris confusus amici,
Laudo tamen vacuis quid sedem figure Cumis
Destinat, atque unum civem donare Sibyllæ.
Janua Bæarum est, et gratum litus amari Secesus.*

CUMÆ (Numis.) medals are extant of this town, which are, for the most part, inscribed KYMAION; but some, as in the annexed figure, bear the inscription KUMELTERNUM, or KUME LITERNUM. The type on the obverse is a head of Apollo, but the bull with a human face on the reverse is supposed to represent their god Ebo.

CUMANUS (Hist.) a governor of Judea, A. D. 51, who, being guilty of great oppression, was banished by the emperor Claudius. Joseph. Antiq. l. 20, c. 5.

CUMBERLAND, William, Duke of (Hist.) second son of George II, was born in 1721; and, after distinguishing himself at the battles of Dettingen and Fontenoy, but still more so at that of Culloden, where he defeated the Chevalier in 1746, he died in 1765.

CUMBERLAND, Henry de Clifford, Earl of, was distinguished in his early youth by his extravagances, for the support of which he turned plunderer; but being afterwards reclaimed, he showed himself a brave and dutiful subject by the defence of Skipton Castle against Aske, and his fellow rebels, in the reign of Henry VIII. After being at different periods governor of Carlisle, president of the council in the North, warden of the West Marches towards Scotland, and lord president of Wales, he was cut off by a premature death in 1542 at the age of 49.

CUMBERLAND, George de Clifford, third Earl of, a distinguished navigator, was born in 1558, and died in 1605, after having performed nine voyages, mostly to the West Indies, with great honour to himself, and service to his queen and country. [Vide Plate XIV]

CUMBERLAND, Duke of (Her.) a title which has at different times been conferred on members of the royal family. Prince Rupert, nephew to Charles I, was created duke of Cumberland in 1644, which honour expired at his death in 1682. George, prince of Denmark, was created duke of Cumberland in 1689, and died in 1708. The title was revived in the person of prince William, second son of George II before-mentioned; and again in the person of prince Ernest Augustus, fifth son of his late majesty George III, who in 1799 was created duke of Cumberland and Tiviotdale, in Great Britain, and earl of Armagh, in Ireland. He is a knight of the Garter, chancellor of the University of Dublin, a lieutenant-general in the army, and colonel of the 15th regiment of light dragoons. The arms of his royal highness are the same as the prince of Wales, with the omission of the escutcheon of pretence in the fourth quarter, and the label differenced.

CUMBERLAND, Earl of, a title conferred in 1523 on Henry, eleventh lord de Clifford, which became extinct on the death of Henry, the fifth earl, in 1643.

CUMBERLAND, Richard (Ecc.) an English prelate, was born in London in 1632, educated at Cambridge; and, after some preferment in the church, was raised to the see of Peterborough in 1691, where he died in 1718, leaving, among his works as an author, 'De Legibus Naturæ Disquisitio Philosophica,' 4to. Lond. 1672, and frequently reprinted since; it was likewise translated into English three different times, first by James Tyrrel, esq. grandson to archbishop Usher, 8vo. London, 1692; secondly, by the Rev. John Maxwell, 4to. 1727; and thirdly, by the Rev. John Towers, 4to. Dublin, 1750. Barbeyrac published a French translation in 1744.

CUMBERLAND, Denison, grandson of the preceding, after being educated at Cambridge, was made successively bishop of Clonfert and Kilmore, and died in 1775.

CUMBERLAND, Richard (Biog.) a dramatic and miscellaneous writer, son of Denison Cumberland, bishop of Kilmore, before-mentioned, and grandson of Bently the critic, was born in 1732 in the master's lodge in Trinity College, Cambridge, over which his grandfather presided, and died in 1811, after having passed some part of his life in a public character in Spain. He wrote, besides his comedies, which were very numerous, a periodical work, entitled the 'Observer;' 'Memoirs of his own Life;' 'Calvary;' and 'The Exodiad,' epic poems; 'Retrospection,' a poem; some sermons, novels, &c.

CUMBERLAND (Geog.) anciently called Cumbria, a maritime county of England, bounded on the N. by Scotland, E. by Northumberland, Durham, and Westmoreland, S. by Lancashire, and on the W. by the Irish Sea and Solway Frith. Its chief towns are Carlisle, the capital, Cockermouth, Whitehaven, Workington, Maryport, and Harrington. Of its numerous rivers, the Eden and the Derwent hold the first rank; its celebrated lakes are Derwent-water, Buttermere, Bassenthwaite-water, Cromack-water, Lowes-water, Ulla-water, Wast-water, Ennerdale-water, and Leathes-water. The principal mountains are Skiddaw, Saddleback, and Crossfell. Remains are still to be seen of the wall begun by Adrian, and completed by Severus, to protect the southern districts from the incursions of the Brigantes and Caledonians.

CUMBERNAULD, Lord (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Balcarras.

CUMING (Her.) the name of an ancient family of Elgin and Gordonstone, co. Perth, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1804 on sir Alexander Penrose Cuming Gordon, who assumed the name and arms of Gordon, according to the will of sir William Gordon, bart. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth azure, three garbs or; second and third argent, three bends sable, each charged with three roses of the field barbed or; over all, on an escutcheon of pretence, the arms of Gordonstoun quarterly; first and fourth grand quarterings counter-quartered first azure, three boars' heads couped or, armed and langued gules, for Gordon; second or, three lions' heads erased gules, for Badenoch; third or, three crescents within the royal tressure gules, for Seton, &c. [Vide Gordon]

Crest. A cat salient proper.

Crest. A lion rampant or; in his dexter-paw a dagger proper.

Motto, over the Crest. "Courage."

Supporters. Two horses proper.

Motto. "Sans crainte."

CUNÆUS, Peter (Biog.) a lawyer of Flushing, in Zealand, was born in 1586, and died in 1638. Among his works were, 1. 'De Republica Hebræorum,' which was made a text-book by the professors at Leyden. 2. 'Satyra Menippeæ,' &c. Lugd. Bat. 1632.

CUNAXA (Geog.) a place of Assyria, 500 stadia from Babylon, famous for the battle fought between Artaxerxes, and his brother Cyrus the Younger. Plut. in Artax.; Ctesias.

CUNEGONDE (Hist.) daughter of Siegfried, count Palatine, was married to Henry II, by whom she was neglected, and charged with incontinence, from which charge she offered to clear herself by walking bare-footed over burning coals. After his death she retired to a convent which she had founded.

CUNEUS (Geog.) a cape in Spain, now Algarve, extending into the sea in the form of a wedge. Mel. l. 3; Plin. l. 4.

CUNINA (Myth.) or Cunaria, a deity of Rome presiding over children in the cradle. Varr. apud Lactant. l. 1.

CUNITIA (Biog.) or Cunitz, Maria, a lady of Silesia in the 17th century, who was skilled in mathematics and astronomy, of which she gave a proof in a work, entitled 'Urania Propitia,' 1650; besides some other treatises on the same subject.

CUNLIFFE (Her.) the name of a family of Saxon descent, which at present enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1759 on sir Ellis Cunliffe. Their arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Sable, three conies current argent, two and one.

Crest. A greyhound sejant argent, collared sable.

Motto. "Fideliter."

CUNNINGHAM, William (Biog.) a physician in the 16th century, wrote, 1. 'Cosmographical Glass, containing the Pleasant Principles of Cosmographie, Geographie,' &c. fol. 1559. 2. 'A Commentary on Hippocrates,' 'De Aere, Aquis et Regionibus.' 3. 'A Treatise on the French Disease.'

CUNNINGHAM, Alexander, an historian of Selkirk, in Scotland, who died in 1737 at the age of 83, was the author of a History of Great Britain, from the Revolution to the Accession of George I, published in 2 vols. 4to. 1787, originally in Latin, and translated by Dr. Thompson. It is doubtful whether he were the author of criticisms on Horace and Virgil, which were published at Edinburgh in 2 vols. 8vo. 1721, and were written by a person of the same name; but it is maintained by some that the editor of Horace died at the Hague in 1730, and the historian at London in 1737.

CUNNINGHAM, John, a poet of Dublin, was born in 1729, and died in 1733. His works have found a place among the 'British Poets.'

CUPER (Biog.) or Cuperus, Gisbert, a philologist of Hemmen, in the duchy of Guelderland, was born in 1644, and died in 1716. His works are, 1. 'Observationum Libri III,' &c. 8vo. Ultraj. 1670. 2. 'Harpoerates et Monumenta Antiqua inedita,' 4to. ibid. 1676, 1687, and 1694. 3. 'Apotheosis, vel Consecratio Homeri,' 4to. Amst. 1683. 4. 'Historia trium Gordianorum,' 12mo. Daventr. and 8vo. 1697. 5. 'Lettres de Critique d'Histoire, de Litterature,' &c. 4to. Amsterdam, 1742; besides his Letters, &c.

CUPIDO (Myth.) Cupid, the god of love, who is said by Hesiod to be the son of Chaos and Terra; by Simonides, of Mars and Venus; by Sappho, of Venus and Caelum; and by Seneca, of Venus and Vulcan. Cicero speaks of three Cupids, but most of the ancients agree in making Venus to be his mother, and some suppose him to have sprung from her alone. His power, and other attributes, are described very frequently by the poets.

Anac. Od. εἰς Ἑρωτα.

Ὁ δὲ καὶ θεῶν δυνατὴς
Ὁ δὲ καὶ βροτῶς δαμάζει.

Theocrit. Idyll. 3.

Νῦν ἔγνω τὸν Ἑρωτα, βαρὺς θεός, ἢ ῥα λαιῖναι
Μασθὼν ἐθῆλαζε.

Hesiod. de Cupid.

Mythology and History of Cyprus.

The inhabitants of Cyprus being much addicted to luxury and effeminate pleasures; it was fabled to be the birth-place of Venus, who was the chief deity of the place, having many temples and groves consecrated to her worship, whence she was called Cypris, and is thus addressed by Horace.

Horat. ad Ven.

Sic te Diva potens Cyprî.

It was anciently divided into nine kingdoms, first subject to the Egyptians, and afterwards to the Persians; from whom it was taken by the Greeks, and passed from them to the Romans, having in the mean time had kings of its own, who were related to the kings of Egypt. Ptolemy, the last king of Cyprus, is said to have been killed on the approach of the Romans, U. C. 697, A. C. 57; when Cato, whom the senate sent into Cyprus, brought thence immense wealth to Rome, and enriched the coffers of the state with more than thirty millions of money. Cyprus continued subject to the Greek emperors, from the time of Constantine the Great, until that of Richard I, of England, who on his way to the Holy Land, having been thrown by a storm on this island, which was then in a state of revolt, under a factious leader named Isaac Comnenus, took possession of the kingdom in 1191, and gave it to Gui de Lusignan, who, with his successors, reigned there until the time of James, the natural son of John or Janus. The following is a list of the kings of Cyprus, in chronological succession:

Kings.	Began to Reign.
Gui de Lusignan.....	1191
Amauri.....	1205
Hugh I.....	1218
Henry I.....	1253
Hugh II.....	1267
Hugh III.....	1284
John or Janus I.....	1285
Henry II.....	1315
Hugh IV.....	1352
Peter.....	1370, or 71
Peter II, or Perrot.....	1383
James.....	1410
John or Janus II.....	1431
John III.....	1458
Charlotte.....	1467
James, the bastard and usurper	1473

Charlotte, the daughter of James III, having been expelled the throne by James, the natural son of John, had made over the kingdom of Cyprus to Charles, duke of Savoy, but he having married the daughter of Marc Cornaro, a Venetian nobleman, she, on the death of her husband, transferred the kingdom to the Venetians, who retained possession of it until 1571, when the sultan, Selim II, attacked the island, and having taken the port of Famagouste, a well fortified place, after a siege of 45 days, the whole island surrendered to the Turks, and has remained in their hands ever since. *Herodot. l. 2, &c.; Thucyd. l. 1, &c.; Strab. l. 15; Mel. l. 2; Plin. l. 12; Ptol. l. 5; Justin. l. 18; Flor. l. 3; Gui de Lusignan, Hist. Ecclesiastical History of Cyprus.

The church of Cyprus was founded, as before observed, by Paul and Barnabas, the latter of whom is said to have suffered martyrdom while acting as its first bishop. The see of Salamis, which is the metropolitan of the island, was declared by the council of Ephesus to be independent of that of Antioch, and has preserved its independence since its conquest by the Turks. St. Epiphanius, bishop of Salamis, held a council there in 399, and another council was held in 643. Socrat. Hist. l. 6, c. 9; Sozom. l. 1, c. 14; Conc. Ephes. &c.; Baron. Annal. &c.

CYPRUS (Numis.) the most frequent type on the medals of this island is the temple of the Paphian goddess, as in the annexed figure; inscription, ΚΥΠΡΙΩΝ; sometimes with the name of their kings, and sometimes with that of the emperors Augustus, Caligula, Claudius, Galba, Vespasian, Titus, Domitian, Trajan, Didia Clara, Septimius Severus, Julia Domna, Caracalla, Geta, Macrinus, &c.

CYPSELUS (Hist.) Κύψελος, a king of Arcadiâ, who, to avoid the violence of the Heraclidæ, gave his daughter to Ctesiphontes, son of Aristomachus. Paus. l. 4.

CYPSELUS, son of Action, succeeded as king of Corinth, in the 30th Olympiad, A. C. 658, and died after a reign of 30 years. Herod. l. 1; Aristot. Pol. l. 5; Cic. Tusc. l. 5; Paus. l. 5.

CYPSELUS II, grandson of the preceding, succeeded his father Periander, on the throne of Corinth, in the 48th Olympiad, A. C. 587, and in the end became deranged. Herod. l. 5.

CYPSELUS, the father of Miltiades. Herod. l. 6, c. 35.

CYRANO (Biog.) vide Berzerac.

CYRENAICA (Geog.) vide Cyrene.

CYRENE (Bibl.) the country spoken of under Geography, is mentioned in the New Testament on several occasions, particularly in the case of Simon, who bore the cross of our Saviour. Matth. xxvii; Mark xv; and Luke xxxiii. St. Luke speaks in the Acts of some Cyrenians, who were Jews, and particularly hostile to Christianity; and also of some who were believers. Acts v and xi.

CYRENE (Myth.) Κυρήνη, the daughter of Peleus, of whom Apollo was enamoured. She is said to have been carried by the god to that part of Africa which was called after her Cyrenaica, where she brought forth Aristæus, her son. Pind. Pyth. od. 4; Virg. Geog. l. 4; Justin. l. 13.

CYRENE (Geog.) a city of Libya, between the great Syrtis and the Marcotis. The district, of which this was the capital, was called Cyrenaica, or Pentapolis, from its five principal cities, namely, Cyrene, Apollonia, Arsinoe, Berenice, and Ptolemais.

History of Cyrene and Cyrenaica.

Cyrene, now called Cirene, or Corone, was founded by Battus, their first king, in the 33d Olympiad, A. C. 631; who after a reign of 40 years, was succeeded by his son Arcesilaus, who reigned 16 years, and was succeeded by another Battus, surnamed Eudemus. The last king of this family, which had held the throne for eight generations, during the space of 200 years, was Arcesilaus IV, who was killed by his subjects. After being subject to different masters who usurped the government, it fell into the hands of Alexander the Great, at whose death it became subject to the Ptolemies. One of this name, surnamed Apion the Bastard, brother of Lathurus, being king of Cyrene U. C. 658, A. C. 96, made the Roman people his heirs; in consequence of which the senate decreed that the towns of this little state should be free; but the people revolting, the Romans ruined the town of Cyrene, and most other places in this district, which they afterwards rebuilt. Cyrena shared the fate of the rest of Africa, and became successively subject to the Arabians and the Turks, which latter nation still retains possession of whatever remains here from the ravages of time and war; and distinguish the district by the name of Mesrate. The town of Cyrene is celebrated as the birth-place of Aristippus, the disciple of Socrates, who was the founder of the sect denominated Cyrenaici, also of Callimachus, Eratosthenes, Carneades, Anniceris, &c. Herod. l. 3, c. 4; Liv. l. 23; Strab. l. 17; Mel. l. 1; Plin. l. 5; Tac. Annal. l. 3; Justin. l. 13, &c.; Marmol. l' Afrique, l. 8.

CYRENE (Numis.) the two types which most frequently occur on the medals of Cyrene, are the figure of Jupiter Ammon, and of the plant silphium, as in the annexed cut; the ordinary inscription, KYPANEION, to which was sometimes added, THE IEPAΣ KAI AYTONOMOIY; i. e. Cyrenensium urbis sacrae et legibus suis utentis. It struck medals in honour of its kings, as Damonactes, Ptolemy, Mogas, &c.; also of the emperors, as Augustus and Titus.

CYRENIUS (Bibl.) a governor of Syria, appointed by Augustus to make a census of the people, for the purpose of taxing them. Luke ii.

CYRIACUS (Ecc.) bishop of Aden, in Cilicia, in the fourth century, who was sent to Rome by the prelates of the east, to be present at a council held by pope Damasus in 382. Baron. Annal. ann. 382.

CYRIACUS, a patriarch in the sixth century, who took the title of episcopus oecumenicus, or universal bishop, which was offensive to the Roman pontiff, who claimed this title to himself. Niceph. Hist. Eccles. l. 18; Theoph. Cedren. et Baron. Annal.

CYRIACUS (Biog.) a native of Ancona, surnamed the Antiquary, in the 15th century; wrote an account of Europe, Asia, and Africa, in a letter addressed to pope Eugene IV, printed in 1742, at Florence.

CYRIADES (Hist.) one of the thirty tyrants who usurped the imperial purple, and was killed by his own troops in 269. Treb. Pol. Trig. Tyrann.

CYRIL (Ecc.) vide Cyryllus.

CYRILLUS, S. (Ecc.) or Cyril, a patriarch of Antioch, in the third century, distinguished for his piety and learning; he succeeded Timeus in 279, and died in 302. Euseb. in Chron. et Hist. Eccles.; Baron. Annal.; et Du Pin, Bibliothec.

CYRILLUS, S., patriarch of Jerusalem, died, after being deposed three times, in full possession of his see, in 386; leaving some Catechetical Discourses, &c. [Vide Plate XX] The best editions of his works are those of Petavius, fol. Paris, 1622; and of Miller, Oxon. 1703. S. Epiphan. Hæres. 66; S. Hieron. in Chron. &c.; *S. Johan. Damas. de Orig. CYRILLUS, S., a patriarch of Alexandria, and another celebrated father of the church, succeeded his uncle Theophilus in 412, and died in 444, after having taken an active part in the troubles and broils of the times. The best edition of St. Cyril's works was that published by John Aubert, canon of Laon, 6 vols. fol. Gr. and Lat. 1638. Phot. in Bibliothec.; Sigebert. Script. Eccles. c. 24; Baronius, Trithemius, &c.

CYRILLUS, a deacon of Heliopolis, in the reign of Constantine, who, actuated by an indiscreet zeal, broke the images of the Pagans; for which he was afterwards put to death, in the reign of Julian the apostate. Theodoret. Hist. Eccles. l. 3.

CYRILLUS, a patriarch of Antioch, who succeeded his brother Athanasius in 1618, and was put to death in 1628, by his successor Ignatius.

CYRILLUS, Lucar, a patriarch of Alexandria, and afterwards of Constantinople, was born in the island of Candia in 1572; deposed from the see of Constantinople for his attachment to Protestantism, and after being banished and restored to his see twice, was at length carried away from Constantinople, and, as is said, strangled on board a vessel. Spondan. Annal. ann. 1627.

CYRILLUS, Contar, the successor of the preceding, in the see of Constantinople, is said by his intrigues to have caused the death of the latter, for which he was afterwards punished, by being banished and strangled, by order of the sultan.

CYRUS (Bibl.) Kūpos, the first prince described under History, is frequently mentioned in the Old Testament. 1 Chron. xiii. xiv. xxi. xli. &c.; Jerem. l. &c.; Dan. vii. &c.

CYRUS (Hist.) Kūpos, a son of Cambyzes and Mandane, who, after being exposed on a mountain by order of his grandfather Astyages, king of Media, was preserved by a shepherd, and when he grew up, defeated his grandfather, and united Media with the Persian empire, over which he reigned with great prudence and warlike success. He was afterwards defeated and slain in an engagement with Tomyris, queen of the Massagetæ, a Scythian nation, A. C. 530. Ancient writers differ much in their account of this king. Herod. l. 1; Xenoph. Cyrop.; Diodor. l. 1; Justin. l. 1.

CYRUS, surnamed the Younger, the younger son of Darius Nothus, revolted against his brother Artaxerxes, and was slain in the pitched battle of Cunaxa, A. C. 401. The Greeks who fought on the side of Cyrus, made a memorable retreat, known by the name of the retreat of the ten thousand, which has been described by Xenophon, one of the leaders, in his Anabasis. Diodor. l. 14; Plut. in Artax.; Justin. l. 5.

CYRUS, S. (Ecc.) or S. Cyr, a physician of Alexandria, who suffered martyrdom in the year 311. The Latins and Greeks keep his festival on the 81st January. Bolland. Act. Mart.; Leont. Act. Cyri, &c.

CYRUS, a patriarch of Constantinople, who was driven from his see in 710, by the usurper Philip Bardanes. Baron. Annal.

CYZICUS (Myth.) son of Ceneus and Stilbo, and king of Cyzicus, who, after having entertained the Argonauts, was killed in a nocturnal engagement, which ensued in consequence of the latter having been driven back unexpectedly, on their coast. Apollod. l. 1; Apollonius, Flaccus, &c.

CYZICUS (Geog.) vide Cyzicum.

CYZICUS (Numis.) this town honoured Proserpine in a particular manner, under the name of KOPH, to which they added, the epithet ΚΩΤΕΙΡΑ, i. e. Servatrix; as KYZIKHNQN ΚΩ. ΚΟΡΗ. She is represented as in the obverse of the annexed figure: the reverse of which bears the figure of Ceres. This was a medal of Faustina, who is supposed to be here represented, with the attributes of Proserpine. Cyprius struck medals as an independent state, or in honour of Augustus, Tiberius, Vespasian, sian, Domitian, Trajan, Adrian, Antinous, Antoninus Pius, M. Auralius, Faustina, Annus Verus, L. Verus, Severus, Caracalla, Plautilla, Geta, Macrinus, Diadumenianus, Heliogabalus, Mamae, Alexander Severus, Tranquillina, Philippus sen., Philippus jun., Valerianus sen., Gallienus, Salonina. They were inscribed with the title of Neocori, which dignity they enjoyed twice, as KYZIKHNQN Β. ΝΕΩΚΟΡΩΝ; and frequently with the name of their magistrates, who were pretors, as ΕΠΙ ΤΡ. ΠΑΙΔ. ΑΡΤΕΜΙΔΩΡΟΥ.

Dacia, forming the modern countries of Wallachia, Transylvania, and Moldavia, extended between the rivers Tiberiscus and Hierasus.

History of Dacia.

Dacia had its own kings until the time of Trajan, by whom it was reduced to a Roman province, A. D. 98. It was attacked fiercely by the Goths in the reign of Philip, and in that of Aurelian the country was left to itself, and after being inundated by the northern hordes, it came at length into the hands of Charlemagne. The inhabitants are said to have been converted to Christianity by S. Nicetas, who was their first bishop. Strab. l. 7; Plin. l. 4; Dio. l. 58; Ptol. l. 3; Vopisc. in Aurelian.; *S. DACIER, Anne, daughter of Tanaquil Faber, and wife of the preceding, was born in 1651, and died in 1720, leaving, 1. An edition of Callimachus, 4to. 1674; of Florus, 4to. 1674, for the use of the Dauphin; of Sixtus Aurelius Victor, 4to. Paris. 1681, for the same use. 2. A French Translation of Anacreon and Sappho, with notes. 3. An edition of Eutropius, for the use of the Dauphin, 4to. Paris. 1683, and 8vo. Oxon. 1696; of Dictys Cretensis, &c. 4to. Paris. 1684; reprinted cum Notis Variorum, 8vo. Amstel. 1702. 4. French Translations of some Comedies of Plautus, 3 vols. 12mo. 1683; and of Aristophanes, 12mo. 1684; of Terence, 8 vols. 12mo. 1688; of Homer's Iliad, 3 vols. 12mo. 1711; and of the Odyssey, 3 vols. 12mo.; together reprinted in 8 vols. 12mo. in 1756. 5. 'Des Causes de la Corruption du Gout,' 1714. 6. 'Homère défendu contre P. Hurdouin.'

DACIUS (Ecc.) a bishop of Milan, governed this church from the year 527 to 552 or 555; during which time, notwithstanding his most strenuous efforts to animate the inhabitants to make a stout resistance, he saw the city taken by the Goths, by whom it was besieged, and he himself compelled to seek his safety in flight. A Chronicle is ascribed to him, which has never been printed. Procop. de Bell. Goth. l. 2; Cassiodor. Var. l. 12; Baron. Annal. ann. 538; Voss. de Hist. Lat.

DACRE, Ranulph de (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was one of the most eminent men in his time, both as a soldier and a statesman. He distinguished himself in the services of Edward II and III; in which latter reign he was constituted sheriff of Cumberland, and governor of Carlisle.

DACRE, Thomas, sixth Lord, was one of the lords appointed in the reign of Henry V, as commissioners to treat with James I, of Scotland, for a lasting peace.

DACRE, Francis Lennard, fourteenth Lord, disgraced his birth and character by the part he took during the rebellion, when he condescended to sit in the Commons House of Parliament, which was assembled by Cromwell.

DACRE (Her.) a barony in Cumberland, which first belonged to the family of Vaux, and in the reign of Henry, III. passed by marriage into that of De Moulton, from whom descended Ranulph de Dacre before-mentioned, who is reckoned the first lord Dacre. At the death of Thomas, the sixth lord before-mentioned, the barony passed into the family of Fynes, by the marriage of Joan, his granddaughter, to sir Richard Fynes, who became seventh lord Dacre, by right of his wife. On the death of Gregory Fynes, tenth lord Dacre, this barony passed into the family of the Lennards, by the marriage of Margaret Dacre with Sampson Lennard, esq. whose son and heir, Henry Lennard, became at the death of his mother twelfth lord Dacre. Thomas lord Dacre, his grandson, was created 26 Car. II. earl of Sussex, which title became extinct at his death, without male issue, in 1715; but the barony was in abeyance between his daughters until the death of the eldest; it remained, however, in the family of the Lennards by the marriage of the youngest daughter, lady Anne Lennard, baroness Dacre, with her cousin Richard Barrett Lennard, whose son succeeded to the title; but on the death of his nephew and heir, Charles Trevor Roper, his sister Gertrude succeeded as baroness Dacre; by whose marriage with Thomas Brand, esq. the barony and title devolved to the Brand family. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:
Arms. — — — — —

History of Dalmatia.

Dalmatia, which was formerly written likewise Dalmatia, but by the Greeks Δαλματία, derived its name from its principal town Δάλματον, or Dalmatium, which was at an early period a place of great importance. Its kings were better known by the name of the kings of Illyria; one of these, named Agreus, left a widow of the name of Teuca, who, having caused the Roman ambassadors to be put to death, drew down upon her country the vengeance of the latter. The Dalmatians were subdued, U. C. 632, A. C. 122, by the consul L. Metellus, on that account surnamed Dalmaticus. On the division of the Roman empire, Dalmatia formed a part of the Western empire, from which it was dismembered by the conquests of the Goths, the Servians, and the Croatsians; those two latter people shared Dalmatia between them, to whom the bans or dukes were tributary. The Hungarians gained possession of Dalmatia for some time during the 12th century; but the Venetians, who had previously held some places there, succeeded at length in making themselves masters of the whole country, which was afterwards made over to Austria, with the exception of such parts as had been seized by the Turks. During the French revolution, Dalmatia experienced some changes in common with the rest of Europe, but has now reverted to its former possessor. *Polyb. Excer pt. Legat. 124; Scylax. - DAMASCUS (Bibl.) דַּמָּשְׁק, the city described under Geography, is frequently spoken of in Scripture, being a city as early as the time of Abraham. In the time of David, Hadad, the king of Damascus, sent troops to the assistance of Hadadezer, king of Zobah, which were defeated by the former, A. M. 2992, A. C. 1012. Toward the end of Solomon's reign, Rezin, son of Eliadah, having shaken off the yoke of the Jewish kings, assumed the title of king of Damascus; but Ahaz, assisted by Tiglath Pileser, king of Assyria, destroyed the city, killed Rezin, and sent the inhabitants into captivity. Damascus having recovered from these misfortunes was afterwards taken by Holofernes; and, though described as flourishing by the prophet Ezekiel, it was threatened with the attacks of Nebuchadnezzar by the prophet Jeremiah; and, after the return from the captivity, with calamities by the prophet Zechariah. In the New Testament, Damascus is celebrated as the place whither St. Paul was going when he was miraculously converted. Gen. xiv. xv.; 2 Kings xiv. xvi.; 1 Chron. xviii.; Isa. vii.; Amos. i. 3.
- DAMASCUS (Geog.) a city of Damascene, in Syria, which is now the capital of a pachalic of the same name in Asiatic Turkey. It stands in a very fertile plain at the foot of Mount Libanus, on the river Barada, called by the ancients Chrysorrhœas, 20 m. N. N. E. Jerusalem, 150 S. Aleppo. Lon. 36° 40' E. lat. 33° 30' N. It was one of the richest and most fertile cities in antiquity.

History of Damascus.

The earliest account of this city has already been given under Biblical History. On the death of Alexander it was seized by Parmenio, one of his generals; but was afterwards subject to the kings of Syria, until about two centuries before the Christian era, when it became subject to the kings of Arabia, and was taken from them by Metellus and Lollius, under the command of Pompey, and from that time united to the Roman empire. The Saracens conquered it in 713; and the crusaders, after a fruitless attempt in 1147, became masters of it in 1272. After a desperate and prolonged resistance it fell into the hands of Tamerlane, in 1396, and in 1517 it came finally DANTZIC (Geog.) a town of West Prussia, situated on the left bank of the Vistula, about five miles from its mouth, 68 m. W. S. W. Königsberg, 235 N. E. Berlin. Lon. 18° 36' E. lat. 54° 20' N.

History of Dantzic.

Dantzic, which in the Latin of the middle ages was called Gedanum, or Dantiscum, and by the Poles Gdansk, is supposed to derive its name from Dans-Wik, or the village of the Danes, by whom, in all probability, it was first built. It was afterwards materially enlarged in the 12th century by Subislaus, grandson of Suantiborus, who took it from the Danes. The Poles became masters of it in 1295, when Primislaus erected it into a city. The knights of the Teutonic Order got possession of it in 1303, and surrounded it with walls in 1343; but Casimir III, king of Poland, retook it in 1454, and invested it with great privileges, particularly an exemption from taxes. In 1577 this city was besieged by Stephen Bathori, the rival candidate for the empire with Maximilian of Austria; and the Dantzickers were compelled to purchase their pardon by the payment of a large sum of money. They resisted the Swedes in 1655, in favour of their sovereign Casimir; and in 1734 received Stanislaus a candidate for the Polish crown within their walls; but were forced to surrender to the Russians and Saxons. During the revolutionary war Dantzic was occupied by the Prussians, in whose possession it remained until 1807, when it was taken by the French, after a long siege; but was restored to Prussia in 1814. *Cluv. Herodotus makes it fall into the Euxine by five mouths; Pliny and Ptolemy by six; but Marcellinus assigns seven mouths to it. The Danube, according to modern geography, is the largest river in Europe, having its source at the foot of a mountain, named Die Bar, in the Black Forest, in Suabia; and after receiving about 40 navigable rivers, among which are the Aller, Lech, Iser, Inn, Save, Drave, &c. it finishes a course of about 1600 miles by emptying itself by five mouths into the Black Sea. The principal cities which it washes in its course are Ulm, Donawert, Ingolstadt, Ratisbon, Passau, Vienna, Presburgh, Belgrade, &c. It is called by the Germans Die Donau, and by the Hungarians Dunai. As it was generally supposed to be the boundary of the Roman empire, several castles were erected on its banks to check the incursions of the barbarous tribes. Herod. l. 2, &c.; Apollon. l. 4; Diodor. l. 4; Strab. l. 1; Mela. l. 2; Lucan. l. 2, &c.; Plin. l. 4; *Dionys. DANUBIUS (Numis.) this river is represented on medals under the figure of a bearded old man, lying and resting with his arm on an urn, from which water is streaming, as in the annexed figure; over his head is extended a garment, folded in the form of an arch, to denote the stone bridge erected over this river by Trajan.

DANVERS, Sir Charles (Hist.) second son of sir John Danvers, of Dantsey, in Wiltshire, was executed for taking part in Essex's insurrection in 43 Elizabeth.

DANVERS, Sir Henry, Earl of Danby, and Lord Dantsey, younger brother of the preceding, distinguished himself as a warrior in the Low Countries; and also as a patron of science, by founding the botanic garden in Oxford. He also founded an alms-house and a free-school at Malmesbury, in Wiltshire, and died in 1643.

DANVERS, Sir John, younger brother of the preceding, one of the most ungrateful of the regicides, sat in judgment on his royal master, who had been gracious both to him and his family, and was one of those who signed the warrant for his execution. He died before the restoration of Charles II; but all his estates, both real and personal, were confiscated in 1661.

D'ARCY, Patrick Count (Hist.) a mathematician, and a soldier, of a noble and ancient family in Ireland, was born in Galloway in 1725, and died in 1779, after having been actively engaged in favour of the Stuarts, for whose family and cause his parents and himself were exiles from their country. He contributed many treatises on philosophical subjects to the Memoirs of the Academy of Sciences.

DARCY, Lord (Her.) a title by which Thomas Darcy was summoned to parliament, 1 Henry VIII. He was beheaded for treason in 1539; but his son George was restored to his title, which became extinct at the death of John, fourth lord Darcy, in 1635.

DARDANELLES (Geog.) two strong castles on the Straits of Gallipoli, otherwise called the Strait of the Dardanelles, between the sea of Marmora and the Grecian Archipelago. The one situated in Europe is called Sesto, or by the Turks Roumeli Iski-issar, i. e. the Castle of Romania; and the other, standing on the Asiatic side, Avido, Abido, or Natolie Iski-issar, i. e. the Castle of Natolia, which are supposed to stand on the sites of the ancient Sestos and Abydos. These are called the Old Dardanelles, to distinguish them from the New Dardanelles, which were built at the entrance of the strait in 1658 by order of Mahomet IV. Of these the one built on the European side is called by the Turks Roumeli Iski-issar. A British squadron in 1807 passed the Dardanelles on its way to Constantinople, after having been exposed to a very heavy cannonade from both sides. The name of Dardanelles is doubtless from the ancient town of Dardanus, and the promontory of Dardanium in this neighbourhood.

DARDANIA (Geog.) a town or country of Troas, from which the Trojans derived the name of Dardani. There was a country of the same name on the east of Illyricum.

DARDANIDES (Myth.) a patronymic for Æneas, and the descendants of Dardanus.

DARDANIUM (Geog.) a promontory of Troas, so called from a small town of Dardanus, from which the modern name of Dardanelles is derived.

DARDANUS (Myth.) Δάρδανος, a son of Jupiter and Electra, who built the city of Dardania, and was reckoned the founder of the Trojan kingdom. Hom. Il. l. 20; Apollod. l. 3; Virg. Æn. l. 3; Hygin. Fab. 155; Paus. l. 7.

DARIOBRIGUM (Geog.) a town of Gaul, now Vannes, in Brittany.

DARIUS (Bibl.) the name by which some of the Persian kings, are spoken of in Scripture.

DARIUS, surnamed the Mede, is spoken of in Daniel v. ix. xi. being the king who ordered Daniel to be exposed to the lions. He was uncle, by the mother's side, to Evilmerodach and Cyrus. The Septuagint in Daniel vii. give him the name of Artaxerxes, and in the thirtieth or apocryphal chapter calls him Astyages. Xenophon designates him by the name of Cyaxares.

DARIUS, the son of Hystaspes, is supposed to be the king mentioned in Ezra, who permitted the Jews to complete the building of the temple, which had been begun in the time of Cyrus. Ezra vi. He is also supposed by Calmet and Usher to be the Ahasuerus who married Esther.

DARIUS (Hist.) a name common to several Persian princes.

DARIUS, surnamed the Mede, is mentioned in Scripture by this name, and in profane history by that of Cyaxeres II.

[Vide Darius and Cyaxeres]

DARIUS I, son of Hystaspes, was one of the six Persian nobles who conspired against the false Smerdis, and killed him; after which he was chosen to be king of Persia by means of a stratagem, and died after a reign of 36 years in the 72d Olympiad, A. C. 485. Herodot. l. 1, &c.; Thucyd. l. 1, &c.; Dionys. Hal. l. 5; Corn. Nep. in Miltiad.; Plut. in Aristid. Justin. l. 1, &c.

DARIUS II, surnamed Ochus, or the Bastard, because he was the illegitimate son of Artaxerxes Longomanus, succeeded to the throne of Persia on the murder of Xerxes II, and died after a reign of 19 years in the 93d Olympiad, A. C. 404. Thucyd. l. 8; Diodor. l. 12; Euseb. in Chron.

DARIUS III, surnamed Codomannes, a descendant from the preceding, was raised to the throne by Bagoas the Eunuch, who afterwards wished to dispatch him by poison, which he was himself compelled to drink. He was the last king of Persia, who, being defeated at the battle of Arbela by Alexander the Great, fled into Media, and was assassinated by Bessus, governor of Bactriana, A. M. 3661, in the 112th Olympiad, A. C. 333. Diodor. l. 7; Plin. l. 11; Q. Curtius; Justin. et Arrian.; Plut. in Alex.; Euseb. in Chron.

DARIUS, one of the descendants of Atropatus, the first king of New Media, reigned in that country, while Pompey was making war on Mithradates Eupator, king of Pontus. He was conquered by the Roman general, who granted him peace, U. C. 689, A. C. 65.

DARIUS, a son of Xerxes, who married Artaynta, and was killed by Artabanus. Herod. l. 9; Diodor. l. 11.

DARIUS, a son of Artaxerxes, was declared successor to the throne, but conspiring against his father's life, he was capitally punished.

DARIUS, Tibertus (Biog.) a poet of Cesenna, in Italy, in the 15th century, who wrote an Abridgment of the Lives of Plutarch.

DAVILA, Henry Catherine (Biog.) an historian, of Cyprus, was born in 1571, and died by the hands of an assassin in 1631. His son, a youth of 18, revenged his death by immediately killing his murderer. He wrote, 1. 'Istoria delle Guerre Civili di Francia,' 4to. Venice, 1634, 1638, and often reprinted since; the finest editions are those of 2 vols. Paris, 1644, and Venice, 1733; translated into English in 1647, 1678, and a third time by Farnsworth, 2 vols. 4to. 1755; the French translations appeared in 1642, and in 3 vols. 4to. 1757; the Latin translation by Cornagano, 3 vols. 4to. Rom. 1743.

DAVIS, John (Hist.) a navigator, and native of Sandridge, in Devonshire, was sent in 1585 to discover a North-West passage, and first entered the strait between Greenland and N. America, which has since been distinguished by the name of Davis' Strait. He afterwards went two other voyages for the discovery of the North-West passage, besides five to the East Indies, in the last of which he was killed, in 1605, on the shores of Malacca, in an affray with the Japanese, leaving, as an author, 1. 'The Account of his Second Voyage for the Discovery of the North-West Passage, in 1586.' 2. 'A Traverse Booke, made by M.

John Davis, in his Third Voyage for the Discoverie of the North-West Passage. 3. 'The World's Hydrographical Description;' all which are published in substance by Hakluyt, in his collection of voyages.

DAVIS, Ronland (Biog.) an Irish divine of Cork, was born in 1649, educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and died in 1721. He wrote, 'The truly Catholick and Old Religion;' showing that the Established Church in Ireland is more truly a member of the Catholic Church than the Church of Rome, &c. 4to. Dublin, 1716.

DAVIS, Henry Edwards, a native of Windsor, who was educated at Oxford, and died in 1784, was the author of an examination of Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, which was so respectable a performance, that it was the only one of the many attacks on the historian which he deigned to notice.

DAVISON, William (Hist.) a statesman in the reign of queen Elizabeth, who acted in a diplomatic character in Flanders, Holland, and Scotland; and afterwards as one of her principal Secretaries of State, in which latter capacity he was compelled to take an active part in the trial and death of Mary, queen of Scots, and at length fell thereby under the displeasure of queen Elizabeth, by whose order he was for a time imprisoned.

DAVISON, Francis (Biog.) son of the preceding, published in 1602 some small pieces by himself and friends, entitled, 'Poetical Rhapsodic,' a second edition of which appeared in 1608, a third in 1611, and a fourth in 1621.

DAULIS (Myth.) Δαυλις, a nymph, daughter of Cepheus who gave her name to Daulis, a town of Phocis, which was anciently called Anacris. Liv. 1. 32; Strab. 1. 9; Ovid. Met. 1. 5; Paus. 1. 10; Ptol. 1. 3.

DAUMIUS, Christian (Biog.) a classical scholar of Zwicken, was born in 1612, and died in 1687, leaving several dissertations, &c. inserted in the 'Systema Dissert. Rar.' of Grævius, 4to. Ultraj. 1701.

DAUN, Leopold, Count (Hist.) an Austrian general and field-marshal, who died in 1766, at the age of 61, distinguished himself in the wars of Maria Theresa, particularly in the relief of Prague, to commemorate which great victory the empress instituted the military order which bears her name.

DAUNIA (Geog.) a name given to the northern parts of Apulia, now Capitanata. It received its name from Daunus. Virg. Æn. 1. 8, v. 146.

DAUNUS (Myth.) a son of Pilumnus and Danae, who came from Illyricum into Apulia, where he reigned and gave his name to the country. Fest. de Verb. Sign.; Serv. in Æn. 1. 8.

DAUPHINY (Geog.) an ancient province of France, near to Savoye and Piedmont, from which it is separated on the West by the Alps. It contains the three modern departments of Isère, Drome, and Upper Alps.

Towns. Grenoble is the capital, besides which there are Vienne and Embrun, which are archbishoprics; Gap, Die, Valence, Saint Paul-trois-Châteaux, and Orange, which are bishoprics; Briançon, Montelimart, Crest, Romans, &c.

Rivers. The principal rivers are the Isère, the Drome, and the Durance, which take their rise in the Alps, and terminate in the Rhine.

History of Dauphiny.

Dauphiny, called in the Latin of the middle ages Delphinatus, was inhabited by the Allobroges, Vocontii, Caturiges, &c. when the Romans conquered this country, and formed it into a province of the empire. In the fifth century the Burgundians conquered Dauphiny, which was successively subject to the kings of France, and those of Burgundy. It had afterwards princes of its own, under the title of counts; among whom was Guigues IV, who in 1140 assumed the name of Dauphin, from which the country received that of Dauphiny. Humbert II, the last count, having no male issue, gave Dauphiny to the kings of France, and invested prince Charles, grandson of Philip de Valois, with the principality in 1349; since which time the eldest sons of the kings of France have borne the title of Dauphin.

DAURAT (Biog.) or Dorat, John, in Latin Auratus, a French poet, was born near the head of the Vienne, in the Limousin, about 1507, and died in 1588. His principal collection of verses is entitled 'Joannis Aurati Lemovices, Poetæ et Interpretis Regii Poemata,' &c. 8vo. Paris, 1586.

Crest. Out of a civic wreath or, an elephant's head sable, ear or, tusks argent, the proboscis attached by a line to a diadem coronet, around the neck or.

Motto. "Igne constricto vita secura."

DAWES, Sir William (Ecc.) archbishop of York, and youngest son of sir John Dawes, bart., was born at Lyons, near Brintree, in 1671, entered a scholar of St. John's College, Oxford, in 1687, but afterwards taking his degree of A. M. at Cambridge, he was in 1697 elected master of Catherine Hall; and after different preferments, was in 1707 named to the see of Chester, from which in 1713, he was translated to the archiepiscopal see of York, where he died in 1724. After his death, appeared 'The whole Works of Sir William Dawes, Bart.' &c. 3 vols. 8vo. 1733, with a Preface and a Life, including those he published himself, as 'An Anatomy of Atheism,' 4to. London, 1693, a poem; 'The Duties of the Closet,' &c.; 'The Duty of Communicating explained,' &c.

DAWES, Richard (Biog.) a critic of Leicestershire, who died in 1766, at the age of 57, is well known and honourably remembered as the author of 'Miscellanea Critica,' 1745, reprinted in 1781.

DAWNAY, Sir William (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, a general under Richard I of England, distinguished himself in the crusades, particularly at Acon, in Cyprus, where he killed a chief of the Saracens, and also slew a lion, for which he was marked by the favour of his sovereign, who took a ring off his finger and presented it to him, ordering in perpetuam rei memoriam, that his crest should be a demi-Saracen, with a lion's paw in one hand, and a ring in the other; which is the family cognizance to this day.

DAWNAY, Sir Nicholas, a descendant of the preceding, distinguished himself in the Holy Land against the infidels, in the reign of Edward III.

DAWNAY (Her.) the name of a Norman family, of which was sir Paine Dawnay, of Dawnay Castle, who came over with William the Conqueror. From him descended sir William Dawnay, mentioned under History; whose descendant, sir John Dawney, of Cowick, bart., was created in 1680 viscount Downe, co. Downe. John Christopher, the fifth viscount, who assumed his mother's name of Burton, was in 1796 created an English baron, by the title of baron Dawney, of Cowick, co. York. [Vide Downe]

DAWSON (Her.) the family name of the earl of Port-Arlington. William Henry Dawson, of this family, was created in 1770 baron Dawson, of Dawson Court, and advanced to the dignity of viscount of the county of Carlow. His son John Dawson, was created earl of Port-Arlington in 1785.

DAWSON, a branch of the same family, of Castle Dawson, co. Monaghan, which enjoys at present the dignity of a baron, conferred in 1797 on Thomas Dawson, by the title of baron Cremorne. He had been previously created baron Dartrey in 1770, and viscount Cremorne in 1785, which titles became extinct at his death in 1813.

DAY (Biog.) Daye, or Daie, John, a native of Dunwich, in Suffolk, and one of our earliest English printers, died in 1584, after having followed the business of a printer for 40 years; during which he contributed to the Reformation, as the lines on his grave-stone intimate, by printing Fox's Book of Martyrs, and other works on that side of the question. He also first introduced the Saxon letter into England.

DAY, John, son of the preceding, was born in 1566, educated at Oxford, and died in 1627 rector of Thurlow, in Suffolk. He published several Sermons, besides 'Day's Diall, or his Twelve HOURS, i. e. Twelve several Lectures by way of Catechisme,' &c. Oxford, 1614.

DAY, Richard, another son of John Day, and a printer, was also the author of some verses 'Contra Papistas Incendarios,' in Fox's Martyrology, 1576; besides translating Fox's book 'De Christo Triumphante Comœdia,' and writing a preface and conclusion to the 'Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs,' &c.

DAY, Thomas, a poetical and miscellaneous writer, was born in Wellclose-square in 1748, and was killed in 1789, by a kick from his horse, who had thrown him. He is better known as the author of 'The History of Sandford and Merton,' than by his eccentricities, which tormented both himself and others, and finally occasioned his death.

DEAGEANT, de St. Marcellin (Hist.) a French writer and negotiator, in the reign of Lewis XIII.

DEANE (Her.) the family name of baron Muskerry, which title was conferred in 1781 on sir Robert Tilson, bart.

DE BATHE (Her.) the name of a family of Knight's-town, co. Meath, in Ireland, which came into England with William the Conqueror. Hugh de Bathe accompanied earl Strongbow in his expedition into Ireland about 1172, and had grants of many manors and lands in the counties of Dublin, Meath, Louth, and Drogheda. His descendant, sir James Michael de Bathe, was created a baronet in 1801. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

DE BURE (Biog.) vide Bure.

DE BURGH (Hist.) vide Ulster and Clanricarde.

DE BURGH, vide De Burgo.

DE BURGH (Her.) the name of the family which at present enjoys the title of earl of Clanricarde, and deduces its origin from Charlemagne, whose great-grandson, Baldwin II, is said to have been the founder of the House of Blois, in France, and the noble families of Burgh and Vesey, in Ireland, by his son John, earl of Comyn, and baron of Tonsburgh, in Normandy, who, being general of the king's forces, and governor of his chief towns, was named De Bourg, or De Burgh, in Latin De Burgo. This, in process of time, was written Bourke, but in 1752 the king, by letters under his signet royal and sign manual, granted to the earl Ulrick Bourke, of London, and Thomas Bourke of Ireland, and their descendants, full power, licence, and authority, to assume and use the name of De Burgh. Harlowen de Burgo, son of John earl of Comyn, had two sons, Robert and Otto, half-brothers to William the Conqueror, whom they accompanied into England. Robert became earl of Cornwall, and John, the youngest of his two sons, became earl of Kent; and the eldest, Adelm, had a son, William Fitz-Adelm, who was made governor of Ireland, and was high in the esteem of Richard I. His son, Richard de Burgo, by Isabel, natural daughter of Richard I of England, was lord of Connaught and Trim, and a person of no less honour and esteem than his father. He was constituted Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland in 1227, and died in 1242, after having built the castle of Galway and Loughreah. His son Walter became earl of Ulster in 1243, in right of his wife, and in 1264 in his own right, having preserved both Ulster and Connaught to the king's laws during his life, which ended in 1271. At the death of William, the third earl, in 1333, this earldom passed out of the family; but from William de Burgo, second son of Richard, lord of Connaught, and younger brother of Walter, earl of Ulster, before-mentioned, descended Ulick de Burgo, who was created, in 1543, earl of Clanricarde, and baron of Dunkellin. Richard, the fourth earl, was advanced to the dignity of the English peerage in 1624, by the title of baron of Somerhill, co. Kent, and viscount Tunbridge, to which titles king Charles I added in 1628 those of baron of Imany, viscount of Galway, and earl of St. Alban's. His son Ulick, the fifth earl, was advanced to the dignity of marquis of Clanricarde, who, dying in 1657, without male issue, the Irish marquissate and the English earldom became extinct; but the earldom of Clanricarde and barony of Dunkellin devolved on his first cousin Richard. [Vide Clanricarde]

DE BURGO, William (Hist.) second son of Richard de Burgo, lord of Connaught, before-mentioned, was surnamed the Conqueror, on account of his warlike exploits during his service in France with his father, when the city of Bourdeaux was taken: and in the service of Henry III of England, in his wars with Scotland. He likewise distinguished himself on several occasions against the rebellious Irish, but was put to death by the king of Connaught, whilst his hostage.

DE BURGO, or De Burgh, Sir William, son of the preceding, was appointed in 1308 custos of Ireland, in which capacity he appeased many disorders, and signalized himself against Phelim O'Connor, king of Connaught, whom he totally routed and slew, with 28 other chiefs. He died in 1324, after a career of military glory.

DE BURGO, or De Burgh, Sir Ulick, son of the preceding, and lord of Clanricarde, followed in the steps of his father, and by his valour did considerable service in reducing his rebellious countrymen to obedience.

DE BURGO, or De Burgh, first Earl, vide Clanricarde.

DECEMBRIO, Peter Candide (Biog.) a writer of Pavia, was born in 1399, and died in 1477, leaving among his numerous works Lives of Philip-Maria Visconti, and Francis Sforza, both Dukes of Milan, inserted by Muratori in Script. Rer. Ital. vol. xx; besides Latin and Italian Poems, Translations of Appian, and Quintus Curtius, &c. into Italian.

DECENTIUS, Magnus (Hist.) was made Cæsar by his brother Magnentius, A.D. 350, and set over Gaul; but when he heard that the latter had laid violent hands upon himself after the victory gained by Constantine at Lyons, he hanged himself after a reign of three years.

DECENTIUS (Numis.) medals are extant of this prince, bearing his effigy, as in the annexed figure; inscription, DECENTIUS FORTISSIMUS CÆS. MAG. DECENTIUS NOB. C. &c.

DECHALES, Claudius Francis Millet (Biog.) a mathematician and astronomer of Chambery, in Savoy, was born in 1611, and died in 1678. His principal work, entitled 'Mundus Mathematicus,' or 'Cursus Mathematicus,' was reprinted in 4 vols. fol. Lugd. 1690.

DECIES, Baron (Her.) the title enjoyed by the family of Beresford, conferred in 1812 on William Beresford, brother of George de la Poer, first marquis of Waterford.

DECIVS (Hist.) a very considerable family at Rome, from which sprung several consuls, some of whom solemnly devoted themselves to death for the benefit of their country. They were of plebeian origin, as we learn from Juvenal.

Juv. Sat. 8. v. 254.

Plebeia Deciorum anima, plebeia fuerunt Nomina. Pro totis legionibus hi tamen, et pro Omnibus auxiliis, atque omni plebe Latina Sufficiunt Dux infernus, Terraque parentis.

DECIVS, Mus. P., a Roman consul, who, after signalizing himself by his courage on different occasions, devoted himself to the Muses for the purpose of animating the soldiers in a battle fought against the Latins, U.C. 414, A.C. 340. Polyb. l. 2; Cic. in Tuscul.; Diodor. l. 12; Liv. l. 8; Val. Max. l. 5, c. 6; Plin. l. 22; Aurel. Vict.; Tacit. Annal. l. 3; Vir. Illust. c. 26.

DECIVS, Mus. P., son of the preceding, imitated his father's example, and, during his fourth consulship, rushed into the thickest of the battle which was fought against the Gauls and Tuscans, and perished U.C. 459, A.C. 295. Liv. l. 9, &c.

DECIVS, Mus. P., a consul, grandson of the first, and son of the second P. Decius, also perished under similar circumstances in the battle against Pyrrhus, U.C. 475, A.C. 279. Liv. l. 10, &c.

DECIVS, Brutus, vide Brutus.

DECIVS, Cn. Mettius, Q. Trajanus, a native of Pannonia, who assumed the imperial purple, and after signalizing himself against the Persians, perished in battle, while fighting with the Goths, A.D. 251. [Vide Trajanus]

DECIVS (Biog.) or Decio, Philip, a jurist of Milan, was born in 1453, and died in 1536. His principal works are, 1. 'Consilia,' 2 vols. fol. Venet. 1581. 2. 'De Regulis Juris,' fol. ibid.

DECKER (Biog.) or Deckher, John, a Jesuit of Hazebruck, in Flanders, was born in 1559, and died in 1619, leaving 'Velificatio, seu Theoremata de Anno Ortus et Mortis Domini,' &c. 4to. Grat. 1606.

DECKER, Thomas, a dramatic writer in the reign of James I, who, among other pieces, wrote 'Satyromastix,' &c. in which he ridiculed Ben Jonson; also 'Gull's Hornbook,' which was reprinted in 1813.

DE CLIFFORD, Rosamond (Hist.) commonly called Fair Rosamond, of the family of De Clifford, mentioned under Heraldry. [Vide Rosamond]

DE CLIFFORD, Roger, a great baron, famous for his valour and experience in military affairs, was successively governor of Marlborough, Ludgershall, and Erdealy Castles, and died in 1286, at the age of 86.

DE CLIFFORD, Roger, son of the preceding, and a no less renowned warrior in the service of Henry III and Edward I, was slain in 1283, in the Isle of Anglesey.

DE CLIFFORD, Robert Lord, commonly called first Lord de Clifford, son and heir of the preceding, was earl-marshal of England in 1307; and after signalizing himself on several occasions against the Scots, was slain at the battle of Bannockburne in 1314.

DE CLIFFORD, Roger, fifth Lord, is recorded to have been one of the wisest and gallantest of the De Cliffords. He often displayed his martial prowess in the wars of Scotland and France, and died in 1390.

DE CLIFFORD, John, ninth Lord, was surnamed the Butcher, from the immense slaughter which he made at the battle of Wakefield, where he assisted the king, Henry VI, in gaining the victory. He remained firm to the house of Lancaster, and was slain in 1461, and 1 Edward IV, at the battle of Towton, in Yorkshire. He was attainted in the parliament of November following.

DE CLIFFORD, Henry, son of the preceding, espoused the cause of the house of Lancaster, and was shot in the throat with a headless arrow, in endeavouring to force a passage for king Henry VIth's army. Of this wound he died instantly, in the 26th year of his age, three months after he had stabbed to the heart the young Edward Plantagenet, earl of Rutland, fourth son of Richard, duke of York. It is said that his body was thrown into a pit, with a promiscuous heap of the slain.

DE CLIFFORD, Henry, tenth Lord, son of Henry de Clifford before-mentioned, was only seven years of age when, the house of York prevailing, he was disguised in the mean habit of a shepherd's boy, to prevent his falling into the hands of his enemies; and in that condition he lived, without being taught so much as to write, till the age of 32, when he was restored in blood and honour in the first parliament of Henry VII. He was afterwards principal commander against the Scots, at the battle of Flodden, and died in 1523, at the age of 70, after spending the greater part of his life in studious retirement.

DE CLIFFORD, Henry, eleventh Lord, vide Cumberland.

DE CLIFFORD, Lady Anne, vide Pembroke.

DE CLIFFORD (Her.) the name of an ancient family, the elder branch of which still retains the de before the surname of Clifford, which Walter Fitz-Richard-Fitz-Pont assumed on taking possession of Clifford Castle. A younger branch of this family is distinguished by the simple name of Clifford. [Vide Clifford] The first in the pedigree of this family, who was styled lord de Clifford, was Robert, the son of Roger de Clifford before-mentioned, who was born in 1274. Henry, the eleventh lord, was created earl of Cumberland in 1523. [Vide Cumberland] On the death of Margaret, baroness of Clifford, in 1775, the baronies of Clifford, Westmoreland, and Vescy, or Vesci, were in 1776 confirmed to Edward Southwell, esq. who by marriage descended from the family of Clifford in the female line. [Vide Southwell] The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

DE FOE, Daniel (Biog.) the well-known author of Robinson Crusoe, the son of James Foe, citizen and butcher of the parish of St. Giles's, Cripplegate, and grandson of Daniel Foe, of Elton, in Northamptonshire, yeoman; was born in 1663, and died in 1731, leaving a vast number of works on Commerce and Politics, &c. which did not survive his day.

DE GINKELL, Godert (Hist.) first earl of Athlone, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, distinguished himself in Ireland in the service of king William, by reducing that country to obedience, for which he was rewarded with grants and dignities, and died in 1702, at the time that he was appointed field-marshal of the armies of the States-general.

DE GINKELL, Godert, his son, acquired great reputation as lieutenant-general of the Dutch forces during queen Anne's wars.

DE GINKELL (Her.) the name of a noble family of Holland, which boasts great antiquity in the United Provinces, where it enjoyed the title of baron de Reede Ginkell, &c. Godert de Ginkell above-mentioned, the descendant of this family, was created in 1691 earl of Athlone, and baron of Agrim, co. Galway. [Vide Athlone]

DEGIS (Hist.) a brother of Decebalus, king of the Daci, who came ambassador to the court of Domitian. Mart. l. 5, ep. 3.

DE GREY, John (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, passed a long life in military employments in the reign of Edward III, who, in consideration of his long and faithful services, and his great years, granted him a special dispensation to be exempted from coming to parliament and councils.

DE GREY, William, Lord of Wilton, was a distinguished warrior in the reigns of Henry V and Edward VI, who, as deputy of Calais, and governor of the Castle of Guisnes, in Picardy, defended the latter for a long time after the town of Calais had been taken. He was at length obliged to surrender, and was continued a prisoner until he was redeemed for 20,000 marks.

DE GREY, or Grey, Sir John, of the Greys of Groby, was slain in the battle of St. Albans, on the king's part, in 39 Henry VI.

DE GREY, Elizabeth, wife to the preceding, and eldest daughter to Richard Wodville, earl of Rivers, was afterwards queen to Edward IV, who, being captivated with her beauty, when she went to him as a petitioner for herself and son, married her. She was wife to the king 19 years; and after his death she took refuge in the sanctuary at Westminster, to escape from the pursuit of Richard III: and being condemned in a præmunire by Henry VII, and all her possessions seized, she died in 1492, in the monastery at Bermondsey.

DE GREY, Sir Thomas, eldest son of the preceding. [Vide Dorset]

DE GREY, Sir Richard, younger brother of the preceding, was beheaded at Pomfret, by Richard III, in 1483.

DE GREY, Thomas, last lord of Wilton, being a violent puritan, was implicated in the conspiracy, called Raleigh's plot; for which he was attainted of treason, and died in the Tower in 1614.

DE GREY, Leonard, Viscount Garney, and sixth son of sir Thomas de Grey, earl of Huntingdon and marquis of Dorset above-mentioned [Vide Dorset], was created lord deputy of Ireland in 1536; but being tried for some treasonable practices with the Irish, was attainted and beheaded on Tower-Hill in 1541.

DE GREY, Henry, duke of Suffolk, vide Suffolk.

DE GREY, Lord Thomas and Leonard, brothers of the preceding, were both executed in 1555, for the part they took with their brother, the duke of Suffolk, in Wyatt's insurrection.

DE GREY, Lady Jane, daughter of Henry de Grey, duke of Suffolk, is more commonly known by the name of Lady Jane Grey. [Vide Grey]

DE GREY, Catherine, sister of lady Jane, was first the wife of Henry, lord Herbert, from whom she was divorced, and afterwards married to Edward Seymour, earl of Hertford; but the latter marriage being without the licence of queen Elizabeth, they were both imprisoned, and she died in 1547, after nine years' confinement.

DE GREY, Lord John, third and youngest brother of the duke of Suffolk, was for some time a favourite at court; but being suspected of having had some share with John Hales in an obnoxious publication, he died in confinement in 1564.

DE GREY, Henry, Lord, Earl of Stamford, vide Stamford.
DE GREY, Thomas, Lord, son of the first earl of Stamford, cut as despicable a figure as his father during the grand rebellion, and after having assisted Oliver Cromwell to raise himself into power by the death of his sovereign, and the suppression of the royalists, he became an object of the Protector's jealousy, and was confined in the Castle of Windsor, from which he escaped, by entering into security for his good behaviour, and died universally despised in 1657.

DE GREY (Her.) the name of a family of considerable antiquity, several branches of which have obtained the honours of the peerage. The first of this family who appears in our public records is Henry de Grey, to whom king Richard I gave the manor of Turroc, &c. in Essex. His second son, John de Grey, founded the branch of the Greys of Wilton, who bore the title of lords Grey of Wilton. On the death of Thomas, the last lord before-mentioned, his sister Bridget married sir Rowland Egerton, bart. who was ancestor to sir Thomas Egerton, earl of Wilton. [Vide Egerton and Wilton] From Roger de Grey, younger son of John, the second lord Grey de Wilton, sprung the Greys of Ruthyn, of whom was sir John Grey in the direct line, whose two sons, Edmund and Thomas, were both honoured with the peerage. Thomas, the younger, was created lord Grey, of Rugemont, 28 Hen. VI; but being an active Lancastrian, he was attainted in 1 Edw. IV, and left no issue. His elder brother, Edmund, was made Lord Treasurer of England in 5 Edw. IV, and two years after created earl of Kent. Anthony de Grey, the tenth earl, was created in 1706 earl of Harold, co. Bedford, and marquis of Kent; and in 1710 was advanced to the dignity of duke of Kent, which titles became extinct at the death of his son Anthony in 1722. His grand-daughter Jemima, wife of Philip Yorke, second earl of Hardwick, inherited the titles of marchioness de Grey and baroness Lucas, of Crudwell. The marquise became extinct at her death without male issue in 1797; but the barony of Lucas devolved to Amabel, the widow of Alexander Hume Campbell, lord Hume of Berwick, who was created in 1816 countess of Grey. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly of four, 1. Argent, on a saltire azure a bezant for Yorke. 2. Gironny of eight pieces or and sable for Campbell. 3. Barry of six pieces argent and azure for Grey. 4. Argent, a fesse between six annulets gules for Lucar.

From Reginald, lord Grey, of Ruthyn, sprung the Greys of Groby, whose eldest son, sir Edward, by a second marriage, bore, by right of his wife, the title of lord Ferrers, of Groby. Edward, second son of this Edward, lord Ferrers, was created in 15 Edw. IV baron Lisle, and in 1 Rich. III viscount Lisle, which title became extinct at the death of the second viscount Lisle in 1504. Sir Thomas de Grey, son of sir John de Grey, eldest son of of the fore-mentioned Edward, lord Ferrers, was created earl of Huntingdon in 11 Edw. IV, and four years after marquis of Dorset, to which he added, in right of his second wife Cicely, the titles of lord Bonville and Harrington. His grandson Henry, the third marquis, was created duke of Suffolk; and sir Henry Grey, nephew of the latter, was created in 1608 lord Grey of Groby, whose grandson Henry, second lord Grey of Groby, was created in 1628 earl of Stamford, co. Lincoln. [Vide Stamford]

DE GREY, another branch of the same family, which derives its descent from William, the third son of the first Henry de Grey, enjoys the dignity of the peerage, conferred in 1780 on William Grey, lord chief justice of the Common Pleas, by the title of lord Walsingham, baron of Walsingham, co. Norfolk. [Vide Walsingham]

DE GREY, another branch of the same family, is distinguished by the name of Grey. [Vide Grey]

DEJANIRA (Myth.) Δεϊανειρα, a daughter of Ceneus, king of Aetolia, and wife of Hercules, ignorantly caused the death of her husband by presenting him with a poisoned tunic, and was so disconsolate at this event that she destroyed herself. Apollod. l. 2; Diodor. l. 4; *Hygin. DELAMET, Adrian Augustin de Bussi (Biog.) a doctor of the Sorbonne, was born in 1621, and died in 1691. His decisions of cases of conscience were collected, with those of M. Fromageau, in 2 vols. fol.

DELANY, Patrick (Biog.) an Irish divine, was born in 1686, and died in 1768. He published, 1. 'The Tribune,' a periodical paper, 1729. 2. 'Revelation examined with Candour,' first volume in 1732, the second volume in 1734, of which a third edition was printed in 1735. 3. 'Refertions on Polygamy,' 8 vols. 1740-42. 4. 'An Historical Account of the Life and Reign of David, king of Israel.' 5. 'An Essay towards evidencing the Divine Original of Tythes,' &c. 6. 'The Humanist,' a periodical paper, 1757. 7. 'An Humble Apology for Christian Orthodoxy;' besides some volumes of Sermons, and a Defence of Dean Swift, his old friend.

DELANY, Mary, second wife of the preceding, and widow of Alexander Pendarves, esq. was born in 1700, and died at the age of 80, highly esteemed for her moral qualities, but still more so for her skill in oil painting, of which she left, among other specimens, 'The raising of Lazarus,' in the possession of her friend lady Bute. She also executed, at the age of 74, an ingenious piece of workmanship, consisting of flowers cut out of coloured papers with her scissors. This Flora, which was by far the completest ever executed by one hand, is in the possession of Barnard Dewes, esq. of Welsborn, in Warwickshire, her relative.

DELAUNE, Thomas (Biog.) a non-conformist, who in 1688 wrote an answer to Calamy's Discourse concerning a Scrupulous Conscience, and also a 'Plea for Non-conformity,' which was written in so offensive a style that he was sentenced to pay a heavy fine, and died in prison.

DE-LE-BOE (Biog.) vide Sylvius.

DELEYRE, Alexander (Biog.) one of the French Encyclopedists, was born in 1726, and died in 1797. His three chief works were an 'Analysis of the Works of Bacon,' several articles in the Encyclopædia, and a 'General History of Voyages.'

DELFAU, Francis (Biog.) a monk of Montet, in Auvergne, was born in 1639, and drowned in 1676. Among his works was an historical eulogy, entitled 'The Epitaph of Casimir, king of Poland,' &c.

DELFINI (Hist.) the name of an illustrious family of Venice. DELFINI, James, distinguished himself as captain-general of the armies of the Venetians in 1258.

DELFINI, John, a doge of Venice in 1356, performed many signal services for the republic by his arms, and died in 1361.

DELFINI, Michael, was captain-general in the Venetian army in 1370.

DELFINI, John, was ambassador from the republic of Venice in Poland, Spain, France, Germany, and afterwards at Rome in 1595, after which he was created cardinal by Clement VIII in 1604, and died in 1622.

DELFINI, Nicholas, brother of the preceding, also acted in a diplomatic capacity for the republic on several occasions, and also as a general in the isle of Candia.

DELFINI, Daniel, a commander of the Venetian fleet, obtained a signal victory over the Turks; and, after serving the republic in a military capacity in the Morea, was sent ambassador to Vienna in 1701.

DELFINI, John Peter (Ecc.) bishop of Zante, of the same family as the preceding, distinguished himself by his erudition at the council of Trent.

DELFINI, John, was born in 1617, named Patriarch of Aquileia by Alexander VII, created cardinal by the same pope in 1667, and died in 1699.

DELFINI, Mark Daniel, archbishop of Damascus, and nuncio in France in 1696, was created cardinal by Innocent XII in 1699, and died in 1704, after having distinguished himself as negotiator.

DE LISLE (Biog.) vide Liste.

DELIUM (Geog.) a town of Boeotia, opposite to Calchis, famous for a battle fought there. Liv. l. 31.

DELIUS (Myth.) a surname of Apollo, because he was born at Delos.

DELIUS, Q. (Hist.) an officer of Anthony, who was sent to cite Cleopatra before him. He afterwards abandoned his master, and fled to Augustus. Plut. in Anton.

DELMATIUS, Fl. Jul. (Hist.) or Dalmatius, a nephew of Constantine the Great, who was honoured by the title of Cæsar, and put in possession of Thrace and Macedonia, but was assassinated by his own soldiers. S. Hieron. Chron.; Zosim. l. 2; Eutrop. l. 10; Oros. l. 7.

DELMATIUS (Numis.) medals are extant of this prince, bearing his effigy, as in the annexed figure; DELMATIUS NOB. CÆSAR. — FL. DELMATIUS NOB. CÆS. &c.

DE LOLME, John Louis (Biog.) a native of Geneva, and a political writer, was born in 1745, and died in 1807. His principal work was 'The Constitution of England, or an Account of the English Government,' &c.; the first English edition was published in 8vo. 1775; besides which he wrote a 'History of the Flagellants,' &c. 4to. 1783.

DELÓS (Geog.) one of the Cyclades at the north of Naxos, which was said to be the birth-place of Apollo and Diana, and therefore sacred to these deities. It was called by different names; as Ortygia, Cynthia, Lugia, &c. and by the Greeks Δῆλος, i. e. manifest, because it suddenly made its appearance on the surface of the sea by the power of Apollo, whence it was denominated by Callimachus πλαγκτή, and by Virgil and others errans.

Virg. Æn. l. 3.

*Sacra mari colitur medio gratissima tellus

It is now called Sdilles, and is under the Turks, by whom it has been reduced to a state of insignificance. Thucyd. l. 3, 4, &c.; Aristot.; Strab. l. 8; Met. l. 2; Plin. l. 4; Plut. de Solert. Anim.; Lactant. in Theb.

DELOS (Numis.) the medals of this island are well known by the types of Apollo and Diana, as in the annexed figure, where the heads of these two deities are jointly represented on both sides, with the bow on one side.

DELPHI (Geog.) now Castri, a town of Phocis, situate in a valley at the southwest side of Mount Parnassus, celebrated for a temple and oracle of Apollo, and also for the Amphictyonic council which assembled there. The oracles were always delivered by a priestess named Pythia. The temple was destroyed, and rebuilt several times; and, being the repository of immense wealth from the rich presents made by those who consulted the oracle, it was no less fre-

- quently the object of plunder. Xerxes, and afterwards Brennus, are said to have been deterred from their attempt by supernatural means; but the people of Phocis seized out of it 10,000 talents: Nero carried away 500 statues of brass, and Constantine the Great removed its most splendid ornaments to his new capital. Apollon. l. 2; Diod. l. 16; Cic. de Div. l. 2; Strab. l. 9; Ovid. Met. l. 10; Paus. l. 10; Plut. de Defect. Orac.
- DELPHINIUS (Myth.) a surname of Apollo, because he slew the serpent Python, otherwise called Delphine. Hom. Hymn. in Apoll.; Plut. de Jud. Anim.
- DELPHUS (Myth.) a son of Apollo, who built Delphi. Hygin. Fab. 161; Paus. l. 10.
- DELRIO, Martin Anthony (Biog.) a Jesuit of Antwerp, was born in 1551, and died in 1608. He wrote Notes upon Seneca, Claudian, and Solinus, besides other works; as 'Disquisitiones Magicæ,' 3 vols. 4to. 1601, and some commentaries, &c.
- DELTA (Geog.) Δέλτα, a part of Egypt, lying between the Canopian and Pelusian mouths of the Nile, which was so called from its resemblance to the Greek letter of that name. Herodot. l. 2, c. 13, &c.; Cæs. Alex. c. 27; Strab. l. 15, &c.; Plin. l. 3, c. 16.
- DELVIN, Lord (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Westmeath.
- DEMADES (Hist.) an Athenian orator, who rose from the condition of a sailor to great power in the state, and having ingratiated himself with Philip of Macedon after the battle of Cheronea, was put to death, with his son, on suspicion of treason, A. C. 322. An Oration of his is extant, and was published in Gr. and Lat. in the 'Rhetorum Collectio,' 3 tom. fol. 1513, also 8vo. Hanov. 1619. Cic. Orat. c. 26, &c.; Diod. l. 16; Plut. in Dem.; Quintil. l. 2, c. 17.
- DEMÆNÆTUS (Biog.) a rhetorician of Syracuse, and an enemy to Timoleon. C. Nep. in Tim. c. 5.
- DEMAGORAS (Biog.) an historian, who wrote concerning the foundation of Rome. Dionys. Hal. l. 1.
- DEMARCHUS (Hist.) Δημαρχος, a Syracusan, put to death by Dionysius.
- DEMARETUS (Hist.) Δημάρετος, a citizen of Corinth, of the family of the Bæchide, migrated to Italy, A. C. 658, and settled at Tarquinii. His son Lucumon was king of Rome under the name of Tarquinius Priscus. Dionys. Hal. l. 1; Cic. Tusc. l. 5, c. 37; Liv. l. 1, c. 34.
- DEMARETUS, the son and successor of Ariston on the throne of Sparta, A. C. 526, was banished by the intrigues of Cleomenes, his colleague, when he retired to the court of Darius Hystaspes, king of Persia, with whose hostile intentions towards Greece he made his countrymen acquainted. Herod. l. 5, c. 75, &c.; Justin. l. 2.
- DEMARETUS, a Corinthian exile at the court of Philip, king of Macedonia.
- DEMATRIA (Hist.) a Spartan woman who killed her son because he returned ingloriously from a battle. Plut. Lac. Inst.
- DEMETRIANUS (Ecc.) succeeded Fabius as patriarch of Antioch in 253, and held the see till 260. Euseb. Hist. l. 6, &c.
- DEMETRIAS (Ecc.) daughter of Olibrius, of the illustrious family of the Anicii, fled to Africa, with her mother Julian, to avoid the fury of the Goths; and, moved by the exhortations of St. Augustin, she determined on leaving her husband, and taking the vows. August. Epist. 143; Ambros. Epist. 84; Hieron. Ep. 8.
- DEMETRIAS (Geog.) a town of Assyria, and also of Thessaly.
- DEMETRIAS (Numis.) medals are ascribed to both of these towns; those of the former bear the inscription ΔΗΜΗΤΡΙΕΩΝ ΤΗΣ ΙΕΡΑΣ, Demetriensium sacræ; those of the latter ΔΗΜΗΤΡΙΟΥ ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ, Demetrii Regis, in honour of Demetrius Poliorcetes its founder.
- DEMETRIUS (Bibl.) Δημήτριος, a craftsman of Ephesus, who stirred up the inhabitants against the Christians. Acts xix. 24.
- DEMETRIUS, a believer mentioned by St. John. 3 John xii. Some have fancied this to be the above-mentioned, but without any ground for such a surmise.
- DEMETRIUS (Hist.) a name common to several princes.
- Kings of Macedonia.*
- DEMETRIUS I, a son of Antigonus and Stratonice, surnamed Poliorcetes, or the destroyer of towns, one of the successors of Alexander the Great, died in the 123d Olympiad, A. C. 286, a prisoner to Seleucus, king of Syria, after having experienced many vicissitudes of fortune. His son Antigonus Gonatus succeeded him on the throne of Macedonia, which continued in the possession of his posterity till the reign of Perseus. Diodor. l. 29, &c.; Justin. l. 19, &c.; Appian. de Bell. Syriac.; Euseb. in Chron.
- DEMETRIUS II, son of Antigonus Gonatus, succeeded his father A. C. 242, and died after a reign of 10 years. Polyb. l. 2; Justin. l. 26, &c.
- DEMETRIUS, son of Philip, was delivered as an hostage to the Romans, and led in triumph by T. Q. Flaminius; but having acquired great esteem at Rome, he was put to death by his father at the instigation of his brother Perseus. Polyb. Fragm.; Liv. l. 33, &c.; Justin. l. 32.
- Kings of Syria.*
- DEMETRIUS I, surnamed Soter, succeeded his uncle Antiochus Epiphanes in the 144th Olympiad, A. C. 162, and was killed in battle by his rival and cousin, Alexander Balas, after a reign of 11 years. Polyb. Legat.; Strab. l. 16; Joseph. Antig. l. 12; Appian. de Bell. Syr.
- DEMETRIUS II, surnamed Nicator, son of the preceding, obtained the throne of his father from Alexander Balas by the help of Ptolemy Philometer, king of Egypt, and killed by order of the governor of Tyre, whither he had fled for protection in the 162d Olympiad, A. C. 126. 1 Maccab. c. 15; Liv. l. 60; Joseph. Antig. l. 13; Appian. de Bell. Syr.
- DEMETRIUS III, surnamed Eucerus, son of Antiochus Gryphus, was taken by the Parthians, and died in captivity in the fourth or fifth year of his reign, A. C. 92.
- DEMETRIUS, Imanowitz, son and successor of Iwan Iwanowitz, made a desperate effort to shake off the yoke of the Tartars, and perished with his army in the attempt about 1343.
- DEMETRIUS, grandson to John Basilowitz I, was declared his successor by his grandfather, but was put to death by his uncle Gabriel.
- Russian Princes and distinguished Persons of this Name.*
- DEMETRIUS, a duke of Croatia and Dalmatia, was adorned with the title of king by Gregory VII. Gregor. l. 7, ep. 4; Baron. Annal. ann. 1076.
- DEMETRIUS I, duke of Muscovy, succeeded George I about A. D. 1230.
- DEMETRIUS II, son of John, died in 1400, after having obtained a signal victory over the Tartars.
- DEMETRIUS, the younger brother of the Czar Feodor, is said to have been killed by Boris, his brother-in-law. On the accession of the latter to the throne of Russia, this Demetrius was personated by a stranger, who, pretending to have escaped from the murderous hands of Boris, found means, at the death of the latter, to raise himself to the throne of Russia. He was however, after a short reign, taken and treated as an impostor, in which character he is generally regarded by historians, who state him to have been a monk of a noble family of Moscow, named Grisku Ulropeja, very much resembling the real Demetrius in person.
- DEMETRIUS, the name assumed by four other impostors, but with less success than the preceding. The first never appeared, although his appearance was announced by the knez, Gregory Schacopski, keeper of the seal to Demetrius above-mentioned. The revolt was at first successful, but being soon afterwards quelled by the czar Zuski, Schacopski and the other ringleaders were put to death. The other pretenders, who acted in person the part they took upon themselves, were put to death in various ways.

DEMETRIUS, Phalercus, a disciple of Theophrastus, who, although better known as a philosopher than a statesman, yet, for a time, succeeded in gaining great popularity among the Athenians, but was afterwards driven into banishment, and died in Egypt by the bite of an asp, which he applied to himself, A. C. 284. His works on Rhetoric and History are supposed to be all lost; and that which bears his name is ascribed by some to Dionysius Halicarnassensis. The best editions of this treatise are that of Gale, Gr. and Lat. 8vo. Oxon. 1676, among the Rhetores Selecti; and the Glasgow edition of Foulis, 1753. Cic. de Fin. l. 5; Diog. in Vit.; Plut. in Exil.; Voss. de Hist. Græc.

DEMETRIUS, a Cynic philosopher, who, for his insolence, was banished by the emperor Vespasian. Senec. de Benef. l. 6, c. 8; Philost. de Vit. Apoll. l. 4, c. 8.

DEMETRIUS, Cydonius, a learned Greek of Thessalonica, wrote, among other things, 1. 'De Contemnenda Morte,' Gr. et Lat. 8vo. Basil. 1553. 2. 'Irrisio Philosophorum Gentilium.' 3. 'Vite et Mortis Compendium,' Gr. et Lat. together with the first treatise, 8vo. Basil. 1586. Cantacuzen. Hist. l. 4.

DEMETRIUS, Pepagomenus, a physician to the emperor Michael Paleologus, about 1270, left a treatise, 'De Podagra,' Gr. et Lat. 8vo. Paris, 1558.

DEMETRIUS, Chalcondylas, vide Chalcondylas.

DEMETRIUS (Numis.) several medals are extant bearing the inscription ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ΔΗΜΗΤΡΙΟΥ, and a crowned head with a bull's horn, after the manner of Bacchus, which have been ascribed to Demetrius Poliorcetes, but on doubtful authority. Others belong without doubt to the three kings of Syria, whose effigies are given as in the subjoined figures; they are distinguished by the inscriptions, ΒΑΣΙ-

ΛΕΩΣ ΔΗΜΗΤΡΙΟΥ ΦΙΛΟΠΑΤΟΡΟΣ ΣΩΤΗΡΟΣ—ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ΔΗΜΗΤΡΙΟΥ ΘΕΟΥ ΝΙΚΑΤΟΡΟΣ—ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ΔΗΜΗΤΡΙΟΥ ΦΙΛΟΜΗΤΟΡΟΣ ΕΥΕΡΓΕΤΟΥ ΚΑΛΑΙΝΙΚΟΥ, &c. Vaillant. Hist.; Froel. Notit. &c.

DEMOCEDES (Hist.) Δημοκῆδης, a physician of Crotona, who, being carried prisoner to Persia, obtained great reputation at the court of Darius, by whom he was sent as a spy into Greece. DEMOCHARES, a poet of Soli, who wrote a comedy concerning Demetrius Poliorcetes.

DEMOCHARES, a painter, commended by Polybius. Polyb. Legat.

DEMOCHARES, a statuary, who wished to make a statue out of Mount Athos. Vitruv. in Præf.

DEMOCLES (Hist.) a beautiful youth who threw himself into a caldron of boiling water rather than submit to the unnatural lusts of Demetrius Poliorcetes.

DEMOCOON (Myth.) a son of Priam, who, after fighting valiantly, was killed by Ulysses. Hom. Il. l. 4.

DEMOCRATES (Hist.) an Athenian, who fought on the side of Darius against the Macedonians. Curt. l. 6.

DEMOCRITUS (Biog.) a philosopher of Abdera, who was known by the name of the laughing philosopher, because he usually laughed at the follies of men.

Juv. Sat. 10, y. 33.

*Perpetuo riu pulmonem agitare solebat
Democritus.*

Horat. l. 2, ep. 1, v. 194.

Si foret in terra, rideret Democritus, cum Dixerum confusa genus panthera camelo.

He died A. C. 361, in the 109th year of his age. His works, which were numerous, are all lost. [Vide Plate XXI] Cic. de Fin. l. 5; Strab. l. 1, &c.; Val. Max. l. 8; Diog. Laert. in Vit.; Ælian. Var. Hist. l. 4; Euseb. Hist. l. 14.

DEMOCRITUS, the name of six writers mentioned by Diogenes Laertius.

DEMODICE (Myth.) the wife of Cretheus, king of Iolchos, who accused Phryxus of attempts upon her virtue, because he would not yield to her guilty passion. She was afterwards discovered and put to death. Hygin. Poet. Astron.

DEMODOCHUS (Myth.) a musician at the court of Alcinous. Hom. Odys. l. 8; Athen. l. 1, &c.

DEMODOCHUS, a Trojan chief, who accompanied Æneas into Italy, where he was killed. Virg. Æn. l. 10.

DEMOIVRE, Abraham (Biog.) a mathematician of Vitri, in Champagne, was born in 1667, and died in 1754, leaving, among his works, 1. 'Miscellanea Analytica de Seriebus et Quadraturis,' &c. 4to. 1730. 2. 'Doctrine of Chances,' &c. 4to. 1718, and 1738, greatly improved; and a third edition afterwards. 3. 'Annuities on Lives,' 8vo. 1724.

DEMON (Hist.) nephew of Demosthenes, who successfully exerted his influence to procure the recal of his uncle from banishment. Plut.

DEMONAX (Biog.) a philosopher in the time of Adrian, who died in his 100th year. Lucian. in Vit.

DEMOPHON (Hist.) an Athenian who assisted the Thebans in recovering Cadmea, &c. Diod. l. 15.

DEMOPHOON (Hist.) Δημοφῶν, son of Theseus and Phædra, was king of Athens, A. C. 1182, where he reigned 33 years. Ovid. in Heroid. l. 2; Paus. l. 10; Euseb. in Chron.

DEMOSTHENES (Hist.) Δημοσθένης, the Grecian orator, was the son of a blacksmith, but, by application and talent, he acquired such influence at Athens that he was placed at the head of the government, in which station he successfully exerted all his powers of oratory against Philip of Macedonia. He was, notwithstanding, banished from Athens on a charge of bribery; and, after being recalled by his countrymen, he was compelled, in the 60th year of his age, A. C. 322, to take a dose of poison to escape falling into the hands of Antipater and Craterus, when they invaded the country. [Vide Plate XXXI]

Juven. Sat. 10.

*Satus est illum
Exitus eripuit, quem mirabantur Athene
Torrentem, et pleni moderantem freno theatri, &c.*

The Athenians erected a statue to him with this inscription:

*Ἐπεὶ ἴσθην γνῶμην, βίωμην Δημοσθένους εἰλεῖν
'Οὐ ποτ' ἂν Ἑλλήνων ἦκεν ἄρως Μαιῶδων.*

The best editions of his works are those of Wolfius, 2 vols.

DENBIGH, William Fielding, Earl of (Hist.) of the noble and ancient family of Fielding mentioned under Heraldry, distinguished himself at the commencement of the rebellion in the service of his sovereign, but died of the wounds he received in the battle near Birmingham in 1643.

DENBIGH, Basil Fielding, Earl of, son of the preceding, did not follow the honourable course of his father, but, siding with the rebellious faction, whom he despised, aided them by his arms, and was opposed to his father in the very battle in which the latter lost his life. He concurred, however, in the restoration, and died in 1675.

DENBIGH, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the ancient family of Fielding [vide Fielding], which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Fielding, of Hapsburg, earl of Denbigh, viscount Fielding, baron Fielding, of Newnham, Paddox, and St. Linn; also earl of Desmond, co. Kerry; viscount Callan and baron Fielding, of Lecaghe, co. Kilkenny; also count of the Holy Roman Empire. Title of the eldest son, viscount Fielding.

Arms. Argent, on a fess azure, three lozenges or.

Crest. On a wreath, a nut-hatch, with a hazel-branch fructed all proper.

Supporters. Two bucks proper, attired and unguled or.

Motto. "Crescit sub pondere virtus."

DENHAM, Sir John (Hist.) a statesman and a poet, was born in Dublin in 1615, and died in 1668, after having aided the royal cause to the utmost of his abilities during the rebellion. His works, which have been repeatedly printed in collections, as well as separately, place him in the first rank of British poets. [Vide Plate XXVIII]

DENIS, Michael (Biog.) a German naturalist and bibliographer, was born at Sclarden, in Bavaria, in 1729, and died in 1800. He wrote, among other things, 1. 'A Systematic Catalogue of Butterflies in the Environs of Vienna,' 4to. Vienn. 1776. 2. 'An Introduction to the Knowledge of Books,' 2 vols. 4to. 1777—1778; besides a translation of Ossian's poems into German, and other works, &c. 3. DENISON, John (Biog.) an English divine, who studied at Baliol College, Oxford, and died in 1628, wrote, 1. 'A threefold Resolution necessary to Salvation,' &c. 4th edit. 8vo. Lond. 1616. 2. 'Justification of Kneeling at the Sacrament,' 8vo. ibid. 1619. 3. 'On the two Sacraments, Baptism and the Lord's Supper,' 4to. ibid. 1621. 4. 'De Confessionis Auricularis Vanitate, adversus Card. Bellarmini Sophismata,' 4to. Oxon. 1621.

DENMARK (Geog.) a kingdom in the N. of Europe, which is bounded on the E. by the Baltic, W. and N. by the sea called the Categat, and on the S. by Germany, to which it is joined on the side of Holstein, by a neck of land about three miles over. The continental part of Denmark comprehends Jutland, Sleswick, Holstein and Lauenburg; the insular part, Zealand, Funen, Langeland, Falster, Laaland, Bornholm, Moen, &c.

History of Denmark.

Denmark, a part of the ancient Scandinavia, [vide Germania] is supposed to have derived its name from the first founder of its kingdom, Dan; from whom the country is said to have been called Dania, and the inhabitants Dani. The reign of Dan, the son of Humble, is dated as early as 1038 A.C. of whose successors the following table contains an account, drawn from early writers on the country, the accuracy of which, in regard to its first princes, may, however, be justly called in question.

DENNE, John (Biog.) a divine and antiquary of Kent, was born in 1698, and died in 1767, leaving, 1. 'Articles of Enquiry for a Parochial Visitation,' 1732. 2. 'Concio ad

Clerum,' 1745. 3. 'A Register of Benefactions to the Parish of Shoreditch.'

DENNE, Samuel, youngest son of the preceding, also a divine and antiquary, was born in 1780, and died in 1799. He published 'Historical Particulars of Lambeth Parish, and Lambeth Palace,' &c., besides contributions to the 'Archæologia,' Vols. VI—XIII; Thorpe's 'Customale Roffense'; Gough's 'Sepulchral Monuments'; Hasted's Kent 'Biblioth. Topog.'; Nichols's 'Illustration of the Manners and Expences of Ancient Times in England'; Atterbury's 'Epistolary Correspondence'; 'The Topographer'; 'Ellis's History of Shoreditch,' &c. He also wrote the 'History and Antiquities of Rochester,' published by T. Fisher in 1772.

DENNER, Balthasar (Biog.) a portrait painter of Hamburg, was born in 1685, and died in 1747. His fame was raised by the head of an 'Old Woman.'

DENNIS, John (Biog.) a poet and political writer, was born in London in 1657, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1733; among his dramatic pieces are 'A Plot and no Plot, or Jacobite Credulity,' 'Liberty asserted,' which, like his political writings, are now forgotten. His 'Original Letters, Familiar, Moral, and Critical,' are among the best of his performances.

DENNY, Sir Anthony (Hist.) one of the gentlemen of the bedchamber to Henry VIII, and a privy counsellor, was so high in favour with his master, by whom he had been enriched, that he was appointed one of the executors to his will. He died in 1505; and his grandson, Edward Denny, was created earl of Norwich in 1626.

DENORES, Jason (Biog.) a writer of Nicosia, in the island of Cyprus, died in 1590, leaving among his Italian works, 1. 'Del Mondo,' 8vo. 1571. 2. 'Dell'ottima Repubblica,' Venice, 1578. 3. 'Della Rhetorica,' 4to. Venice, 1584. 4. 'Della Poetica,' 4to. Padua, 1588. Among his Latin works are, 1. 'In Epistolam Q. Horatii de Arte Poetica,' 8vo. Venet. 1553, and Paris. 1554. 2. 'De Arte Dicendi,' 8vo. Venet. 1553, and Paris. 1554. 3. 'Institutio in Philosophiam Ciceronis,' 8vo. Patav. 1576. 4. 'De Constitutione Philosophiæ Aristotelis,' 4to. Patav. 1584.

DENTATUS (Hist.) vide Sicinius.

DENTON, William (Biog.) a physician, and youngest son of sir T. Denton, of Hillesden, in Buckinghamshire, was born in 1605, and died in 1691. His writings are, 1. 'Hæc Subsecive, or a Treatise showing the Original, Grounds, Reasons, and Provocations, necessitating our sanguinary Laws against Papists, made in the Days of Queen Elizabeth,' 4to. 1664. 2. 'The Burnt Child dreads the Fire,' &c. on the same subject. 3. 'Jus Cæsaris et Ecclesiæ vere dictæ,' fol. 1681, to which was added 'An Apology for the Liberty of the Press.'

DENTON, Thomas, an English divine of an ancient family at Sebergham, in Cumberland, was born in 1721; educated at Queen's College, Oxford, where he took his master's degree in 1752, and died in 1777. Besides being a contributor to the first edition of 'The General Biographical Dictionary,' he wrote, 1. 'Immortality, or the Consolation of Human Life, a Monody,' 4to. 1755, and reprinted in Dodsley's Collection. 2. 'The House of Superstition, a Vision,' 4to. 1762, afterwards prefixed by Mr. Gilpin to his 'Lives of the Reformers.'

DENYS (Her.) a family of East Neston, in Northamptonshire, which at present enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1813 on sir George William Denys. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Argent, a cross patonce between four fleurs de lis vert, on a chief azure, a greyhound current of the field.

Crest. A demi-lion ermine; collared gules, holding between the paws a French lily slipped proper.

Motto. "Hora e sempre."

DEOBIRGA (Geog.) a town on the Iberus, in Spain, now Miranda de Ebro.

DEOBIRGA (Numis.) this town is known by a medal of Galba, bearing the inscription, DEOBIRGA Municipium. Goltz. Thes.

DEON, Chevalier de (Biog.) a Frenchman of an ancient and respectable family of Tonnerre, in Burgundy, was born in 1728, and died in 1810, after having passed the greater part of his life in the garb and under the character of a female, the falsity of which was not ascertained until after his death. He wrote, among other things, 1. 'Memoires,' 8vo. and 4to. 2. 'Histoire des Papes.' 3. 'Histoire Politique de la Pologne.' 4. 'Recherches sur les Royaumes de Naples et de Siciles.' 5. 'Memoires sur la Russie et son Commerce avec les Anglois,' &c.

DEPARCIEUX (Biog.) vide Parcieux.

DERBE (Bibl.) Δέρβη, the city described under Geography, whither St. Paul and Barnabas retreated after having been expelled from Iconium. Gaius also, the host of St. Paul, and St. John the Evangelist, were natives of this place. Acts xiv. and xxi.

DERBE (Geog.) the town of Lycaonia above-mentioned, now Alah Dag, situated at the north of Mount Taurus, in Asia Minor. Cic. ad Fam. l. 13, ep. 73.

DENTRECOLLES, Francis (Ecc.) a Jesuit of Lyons, and a missionary to China, where he died in 1771, left several works in the Chinese language recommending Christianity to the inhabitants.

DERBY, Thomas, Earl of (Hist.) of the noble family mentioned under Heraldry, distinguished himself in the reigns of Edward IV, Richard III, and Henry VII, and died in 1504, bearing the titles of earl of Derby, lord Stanley, lord of Man, and great constable of England.

DERBY, Thomas, Earl of, great grandson of the preceding, acted a no less noble and distinguished part during the reigns of Henry VIII, Edward VI, Mary, and Elizabeth, during which troublesome period he was noted for his loyalty and wisdom in public, and his splendour and hospitality in private life.

DERBY, Henry, Earl of, son of the preceding, was sent ambassador by Elizabeth to Henry III, king of France, and was also one of the peers on the trial of the queen of Scots, being then of the Privy Council. He died in 1592, after having filled many high posts.

DERBY, Ferdinand, Earl of, son of the preceding, survived his father but a short time, having died of poison, as was suspected, through the agency of one Hesket, an emissary of the Jesuits, who had tried in vain to draw this nobleman from his allegiance.

DERBY, James, seventh Earl of, the noble supporter of the royal cause during the rebellion, who, after fighting heroically in different engagements, and defending the Isle of Man most obstinately against the rebels, was taken prisoner at the battle of Worcester, and basely beheaded, in violation of the promise of pardon, in 1651. [Vide Plate VIII]

DERBY, Charlotte, Countess of, the worthy wife of the preceding, was no less distinguished for her gallant defence of Latham House in 1644, against 2000 of the rebel forces; and of the Isle of Man in 1651, which was the last place that submitted to the usurping powers, and of which lord Fairfax enjoyed the profits, while this heroine was detained in prison with her young children till the restoration, and died in 1663.

DERBY, Charles, Earl of, son of James, ventured his life in the cause of Charles II; and on sir George Booth's rising in 1659, in Cheshire, he joined his force at the head of divers gentlemen in Lancashire; but being defeated he was taken prisoner in the habit of a serving man. At the restoration he was made lord-lieutenant of the county of Lancaster, and died in 1672.

DERBY, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the noble family of Stanley above-mentioned under Histry, [vide Derby and Stanley] which with their arms, &c. are as follow: Tiles. Stanley, earl of Derby, lord Stanley, baron Stanley of Latham, and a baronet. The title of the eldest son lord Stanley.

Arms. Argent, on a bend azure, three bucks' heads cabossed or.

Crest. On a chapeau gules, turned up ermine, an eagle with wings expanded or, preying upon an infant in its cradle proper.

Supporters. On the dexter side a griffon; on the sinister a buck, both or, ducally collared and chained azure.

Motto. "Sans changer."

DERBYSHIRE (Geog.) in Latin Comitatus Derbiensis, a county of England, bounded on the N. by Yorkshire, E. by Nottinghamshire and Leicestershire, S. by Leicestershire and Staffordshire, and W. by Cheshire. It is watered by several streams, the principal of which are the Trent, Derwent, Wye, &c. Derby, in Latin Darbia, or Derventia, is its chief town; besides which it contains Chesterfield, Ashbourn, Bakewell, &c. This county was first occupied by the British tribe called the Coritani; became a part of the province Flavia Caesariensis under the Romans; and was comprehended in the kingdom of Mercia during the Saxon heptarchy.

DERCETO (Myth.) a goddess of Syria, otherwise called Atergatis, Asteroth, Asarte, &c. [Vide Astarte]

DERCYLIDAS (Hist.) Δερκυλίδας, surnamed Sisyphus, a general of Sparta, celebrated for his military exploits. He took nine cities in eight days. Xenoph. Hellen. l. 1, &c.; Diod. l. 14; Polyen. l. 2.

DERHAM, William (Biog.) an English divine and philosopher, was born at Stoughton, near Worcester, in 1657; educated at Oxford, and died in 1735. He wrote, 1. 'The Artificial Clock Maker;' a fourth edition of which was published in 12mo. 1734. 2. 'Physico-Theology,' 8vo. 1713; being the substance of 16 sermons, preached at Boyle's Lectures in 1711 and 1712. 3. 'Astro-Theology, or the Demonstration of the Being and Attributes of God,' &c. 8vo. 1714. 4. 'Christo-Theology,' 8vo. 1726. 5. 'A Defence of the Church's Right in Leasehold Estates,' 8vo. 1731; besides editing some of the works of Mr. Ray; and also the 'Philosophical Experiments and Observations of the late eminent Dr. Robert Hooke, and other eminent Virtuosi in his Time,' 8vo. 1726; and revising the 'Miscellanea Critica,' 3 vols. 8vo. 1726; and contributing many pieces to the Royal Society.

DERING (Her.) the name of an ancient family, of which mention is made as early as Henry II. This family at present enjoys the title and dignity of a baronet, conferred in 1641 on sir Thomas Dering; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth, argent, a fesse azure; in chief three torteauxes (as the augmentation); second and third or, a saltire sable.

Crest. On a ducal coronet or, a horse passant sable, maned or.

Supporters. Two horses sable, maned or.

Motto. "Terrere nolo, timere nescio."

DERING, Edward (Biog.) a puritan of the 16th century, of the above-mentioned family, who, though educated at Cambridge, and presented by the queen to the prebend of Chard-stoke, was so carried away with his reforming notions, that it was found needful to suspend him from preaching. He died in 1576, leaving, 1. 'A Lecture or Exposition upon a Part of the Fifth Chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrews, as it was read in St. Paul's, Dec. 6, 1572,' 16mo. London, 1581; which was extended to 27 lectures or readings upon that part of the epistle. 2. 'A Sermon preached before the Queen's Majesty, Feb. 5, 1569,' Lond. 1584.

3. 'A Sermon preached at the Tower of London, Dec. 11, 1569,' ibid. 1584. 4. 'Certain Godly and Comfortable Letters,' &c. 4to. no date; all which, with some other tracts of his, were collected and printed by Field, in 1 vol. 8vo. 1595.

DERMODY, Thomas (Biog.) a native of Ireland, who, after passing through many adventures little to his credit, died in 1802, in the 28th year of his age. He wrote, among other poems, 'The Battle of the Bards,' in allusion to the rencounter between Peter Binda and a brother bard.

DE ROOS (Hist.) or de Ros, Robert, surnamed Furfan, was employed by king John as one of the commissioners to conduct William, king of Scotland, to England, and was afterwards engaged with the rebellious barons against his sovereign, for which his lands were seized; but he probably recovered them again from Henry III, with whom he was in great favour. He was the founder of Hamlake Castle, in Yorkshire, and Werke Castle, and died in 1227, after having assumed the habit of the Order of Knights Templars.

De Roos, Robert, grandson of the preceding, married lady Isabel, the rich heiress of William de Albini, fourth lord of Belvoir, in Leicestershire, and raised a new embattled wall at Belvoir Castle, of which he became seized. He assisted Alexander III, king of Scotland, against his rebellious subjects; and afterwards joining the barons of England against the king, he was appointed to guard the persons of king Henry III, and the prince, who were made prisoners at the battle of Lewes in 1265. This nobleman died in 1285.

De Roos, William, his son and heir, was an unsuccessful competitor for the crown of Scotland, in respect of his descent from Isabel, his great grandmother, daughter to William the Lion, king of Scotland. He distinguished himself for his zeal and fidelity in the service of Edward III, in which latter reign he died.

De Roos, William, his eldest son and heir, was appointed Lord High Admiral by Edward III, and also one of the commissioners, with the archbishop of York and others, to treat of a peace between the king and Robert Bruce. He died in 1342, after having served in the army of the king in France.

De Roos, William, his son, was at the battle of Crecy, and also at that of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, where David de Bruce and many of the nobles were taken prisoners.

De Roos, Thomas, was a firm adherent to Henry VI; for which he was attainted in 1 Edward IV, when he died.

De Roos, Edmund, his son, recovered his possessions from Henry VII, who reconciled the contending parties.

De Roos (Her.) Rosse, or Ros, the name of an ancient family, the ancestor of which, Peter, assumed his surname in the reign of Henry I, from the lordship of Ros, in Holderness. His descendant, Robert de Roos, was summoned to parliament by writ of 49 Henry III, from whom descended Edmund lord Roos, whose sister Eleanor married sir Robert Manners, knt. and had issue George, who, in right of his mother, succeeded as lord Roos, whose son Thomas was created earl of Rutland. [Vide Manners] At the death of Edward, the third earl, the barony passed by marriage into the family of William Cecil, lord Burleigh; and at the death of his son William, without issue, reverted to Francis Manners, sixth earl of Rutland; since which time it lay dormant, until claimed and confirmed in 1806 to Charlotte Fitzgerald de Roos, descended from lady Frances Manners, daughter of John, fourth earl of Rutland, who married lord Henry Fitzgerald, second brother to the late duke of Leinster. The arms of this family are as follow:

Arms. De Roos gules, three waterbougts argent, quartering Boyle.

DERRICK, Samuel (Biog.) a native of Ireland, who was born in 1724, and died in 1769, left, among other things, 'A View of the Stage;' 'A Collection of Voyages;' 'Letters written from Liverpool, Chester,' &c.; besides some translations from the French, &c.

DELTONA (Geog.) now Tortona, a town of Liguria, which was a Roman colony. Cic. ad Fam. l. 11.

Virg. Georg. l. 1.

—Quin tempore primum
Deucalion vacuum lapides jactavit in orbem
Unde homines nati, durum genus.

Juv. Sat. 1, v. 81.

Ex quo Deucalion nimbis tollentibus æquor,
Navigio montem aequalit, sortesque poposcit,
Paulatimque animâ caluerunt mollia sassa,
Et maribus nulas ostendit Pyrrha puellas.

That this fable has its foundation in the scripture account of the universal deluge is too obvious to need any comment, and is one of the numberless testimonies which profane history furnishes in confirmation of the truth of Holy Writ. Apollod. l. 1; Diod. l. 5; Hygin. Fab. 193; Ovid. Met. l. 1; Luc. de Deu Syria.

DEVEREUX, Walter, vide Hereford.

DEVEREUX, Walter, vide Essex.

DEVEREUX, Robert, vide Essex.

DEVEREUX (Her.) the name of an ancient family, which derives its origin from Walter de Ewras, a Norman, who, in consideration of his services to William the Conqueror, obtained the grant of Salisbury and Amesbury, in Wilts. His great grandson Patrick was created earl of Salisbury. Sir Walter Devereux, a descendant from his second son, Robert, was summoned to parliament in 1461, as a baron of this realm, by the title of lord Ferrars; and Walter, the third lord Ferrars, was, in 1549, advanced to the dignity of viscount Hereford; and his grandson Walter, the second viscount Hereford, was created in 1572, by queen Elizabeth, earl of Essex. At the death of the third earl of Essex, without male issue, the earldoms of Essex and Eu became extinct; the baronies of Ferrars, Bouchier, and Lorraine, continued in abeyance, till Charles II revived them in the person of sir Robert Shirley, afterwards earl Ferrars; but the title of viscount Hereford devolved on sir Walter Devereux, grandson of the first viscount.

DE VESCI, Viscount (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Vesey, which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

DEVIZES (Geog.) the Deviezes, or the Vies, a town in Wiltshire, situated on the Kennet and Avon canal, 24 m. N. W. Salisbury, 88½ W. by S. London. Lon. 1° 58' E. lat. 51° 21' N. A strong castle was built here in the reign of Henry I by Roger, bishop of Salisbury, which underwent a memorable siege in the reign of Stephen. The town itself was besieged during the rebellion by sir William Waller, who experienced a signal defeat from a detachment of the royalist army under lord Wilmot on Roundway Down, in Wiltshire.

DEVONSHIRE, first Earl of (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was born in 1590, and died in 1625, after having enjoyed the favour of his majesty, James I. He was one of the first adventurers who settled a colony and plantation in Virginia; and on the first discovery of the Bermudas had, with the earl of Northampton, the earl of Pembroke, the lord Paget, the lord Harrington, and others, a grant of these islands from the king, whereupon they soon made them into a flourishing plantation.

DEVONSHIRE, William, second Earl of, son of the preceding, was beloved and admired in both houses of Parliament, where he was a great speaker. He also upheld the dignity of his family in all public transactions; in which he was deeply engaged during his short life, which was ended in 1628.

DEVONSHIRE, Christian, Countess of, wife of the preceding, daughter of Edward, lord Bruce, of Kinlosse, and sister to Thomas, earl of Elgin, distinguished herself no less by her prudent management of her husband's estates at his death, than by her loyalty, which shone conspicuous in a degenerate age. So steadfast was she in the cause of the king, that the politic general Monk sent her, by a considerable officer, a private signal, by which she might know his intentions of restoring the monarchy. This countess died in 1674, enjoying to the last the most unequivocal testimonies of regard from the royal family, who expressed without reserve their sense of her constant zeal in their service.

DEVONSHIRE, William, third Earl of, and son of the preceding, was not backward in testifying the loyalty which was so distinguished in his parents, and opposed every approach to the rebellion, which afterwards broke out and destroyed the monarchy. He withdrew from England when his services could be of no avail; and, although he suffered much for his loyalty, yet he sought no employment at court. Nevertheless, he enjoyed the confidence of his majesty, Charles II, until his death in 1684.

DEVONSHIRE, William, first Duke of, and son of the preceding, signalized his courage as a warrior by going, in 1665, as a volunteer in the fleet in attendance on the duke of York, when he was present at the desperate engagement of the third of June. He was afterwards a leading member of opposition by the title of lord Cavendish; and at the revolution one of the most strenuous supporters of king William, with whom he was in high favour, as also with queen Anne, by whom he was continued in his high offices until his death in 1707. He was the author of 'An Ode on the Death of Queen Mary,' and 'An Allusion to the Bishop of Cambray's Supplement to Homer.'

DEVONSHIRE, Duke of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Cavendish. [Vide Cavendish] The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Cavendish, duke of Devonshire, marquis of Hartington, earl of Devonshire, baron Cavendish, of Harlowicke. The title of the eldest son, marquis of Hartington.

Arms. Quarterly. 1. Sable, three harts' heads caboshed argent, attired or, for Cavendish. 2. Per bend embattled argent and gules, for Boyle. 3. Chequy or and azure, a fess gules, for Clifford. 4. As first.

Crest. On a wreath, a snake noue proper.

Supporters. Two harts proper, each gorged with a garland or sprig of roses argent and azure, attired or.

Motto. "Cavendo tutus."

K. M. O. ΔΙ. ΑΝΤΩΝΙΝΟC. Medals were struck of this prince in most cities of Greece, and the neighbouring countries.

DIAGORAS (Biog.) an Athenian philosopher, who was noted for his impiety and blasphemy, which provoked his countrymen to set a price on his head. He, however, escaped his pursuers, and flourished A. C. 416. Cic. de Nat. Deor. l. 1; Val. Max. l. 1; Lactant. de Ira Dei, l. 4.

DIAGORAS, an athlete, who flourished about the same period, and is celebrated by the verses of Pindar, saw his three sons crowned the same day at Olympia, and died through excess of joy. Cic. Tusc. l. 1; Plut. in Pell. Gell. l. 3; Paus. l. 6.

DIANA (Myth.) daughter of Jupiter and Latona, and goddess of hunting, is supposed to be the same as the goddess Isis among the Egyptians; bearing the name of Proserpine or Hecate, in the lower regions; Luna, Phœbe, or the moon in heaven; and Diana, in the woods; from which circumstance she was called triformis; she was also designated by the epithets of Lucifera, Ephesia, Delia, Cynthia, Britomartis, &c. The most famous of her temples was that at Ephesus, which was one of the seven wonders of the world; she was on that account called by distinction Diana Ephesia, and represented with many breasts, to denote fertility, as may be seen under Numismatics. The Lacedæmonians, and some other people, used to offer her human victims, before the time of Lycurgus; but the Athenians generally offered her goats; and others a white kid, and sometimes a boar pig, or an ox. Among plants, the poppy and the dityny were sacred to her. According to Cicero, there were three of this name; viz. the daughter of Jupiter and Latona, of Jupiter and Proserpine, and of Upiæ and Glaucæ. Hom. in Apoll.; Hesiod. Theog. 918; Eurip. in Iph.; Callimach. in Hymn.; Appollon. Argon. l. 1; Apollod. l. 1; Cic. de Nat. Deor. l. 3; Horat. l. 3, od. 22; Virg. Georg. l. 3; Manil. l. 1; Plin. l. 36.

DIGBY, Everard (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, fell, with his three sons, in 1440 at the battle of Towton-field, in the county of York, fighting against Edward IV on the part of Henry VI.

DIGBY, Sir Everard, and his six brothers, fought valiantly at the battle of Bosworth-field, on the Lancastrian side.

DIGBY, Sir Simon, the second brother of the preceding, was knighted by Henry VII as well as his brothers, and was the next year commander for the king at the battle of Stoke against the famous impostor Lambert Simnel, who was entirely routed. He died in 1519, after having been actively and honourably engaged in several public posts.

DIGBY, Sir John, the third brother of the preceding, was knighted by Henry VII for his services at the field of Bosworth; after which he signalized himself in the service of Henry VIII, at the battle of Terouenne.

DIGBY, Sir Everard, a lineal descendant of the same family, and an accomplished gentleman memorable for the share he took in the Gunpowder Plot, and his consequent suffering for the offence, was, according to his sentence, hanged, drawn, and quartered in 1606 at the west end of St. Paul's Church.

DIGBY, Sir Kenelm, son of the preceding, was born in 1603, educated at Oxford under the direction of Laud, distinguished himself by his gallant behaviour at Algiers; and, after taking an active part on the side of the king during the rebellion, died in 1665. [Vide Plate XXXVII] He was reputed to be a philosopher in his day, and left, among his works, 1. 'A Conference with a Lady about the Choice of Religion,' Paris, 1638, and London 1654. 2. 'Observations upon Dr. Browne's Religio Medici,' 1643. 3. 'Observations on the Twenty-second Stanza in the Ninth Canto of the Second Book of Spenser's Fairy Queen.' 4. 'A Treatise of the Nature of Bodies,' which, as well as 'A Treatise declaring the Operations and Nature of Man's Soul, out of which the Immortality of Reasonable Souls is evinced,' was printed at Paris in 1644, and frequently reprinted in London. 5. 'Institutionum Peripateticorum Libri Quinque,' &c. Paris. 1651, which piece, joined with the two former, and translated into Latin, was printed at London, 4to. 1669. 6. 'Controversial Letters,' 1651.

DIGBY, Kenelm, eldest son of sir Kenelm, was killed at St. Neots in 1648, fighting on the side of his sovereign.

DIGBY, Robert, Lord, eldest son of sir Robert Digby, of Coleshill, distinguished himself in Ireland against the rebels, and died in 1642.

DIGBY, Simon (Ecc.) youngest brother of the preceding, was educated at Oxford, promoted successively to the sees of Limerick and Elphin, and died in 1720.

DIGBY (Her.) the name of an ancient and honourable family mentioned under History, which was originally called Tilton, from their place of residence in the county of Leicester. The family removing in the reign of Henry III to Digby, in the county of Lincoln, received their name from that place. This family has enjoyed the peerage in two several branches; namely, from the second and third sons of John Digby, esq. who was descended from sir Simon Digby, second son of sir Everard above-mentioned, who was killed at Towton-field. Robert, the son of his second son Robert, was advanced to the peerage of Ireland in 1620; and Henry, the seventh lord Digby, was in 1765 created lord Digby, of Sherborne, and earl of Digby, in England. John, the youngest brother, was created in 1622 earl of Bristol [vide Bristol], which title became extinct at the death of John, the third earl of Bristol in 1698. The titles, arms, &c. of the first and remaining branch are as follow: Titles. Digby, earl Digby, viscount Coleshill, and baron Digby, in England; also lord Digby, baron of Geashill, in Ireland.

Arms. Azure, a fleur-de-lis argent.

DIODORUS (Biog.) the name of several writers of antiquity, as an orator of Sardis, in the 173d Olympiad; a philosopher of the Megaric school, who flourished A. C. 280, surnamed Chronos, is said to have been the inventor of the famous argument against motion; a grammarian who wrote on the wars of Attica; a disciple of Aristophanes; an historian of Ephesus, &c.; but the principal was Diodorus Siculus, an historian, who flourished about A. C. 44, so called from Argyra, in Sicily, where he was born. He wrote a History of Egypt, Persia, Greece, &c. in 40 books, of which only 15 are extant. The best edition of his works is that of Wesseling, 2 vols. fol. Gr. and Lat. 1745. Plin. in Præf. Hist. Nat.; Euseb. in Chron.; Phot. Biblioth.; Voss. de Hist. Græc.

DIODOTUS (Biog.) a stoic, who was preceptor to Cicero. Cic. ad Attic. l. 2, ep. 20.

DIODENES (Hist.) a stoic of Babylon, was sent with Carneades, the academician, and Critolaus, the peripatetician, on an embassy to Rome, from the Athenians, U. C. 599, A. C. 155. Cic. in Tusc. l. 1; Aul. Gell. l. 6; Macrob. Sat. l. 1, c. 8.

DIODENES, a man of distinction in Judæa, whom Alexander, widow of Alexander Jannæus, put to death at the instigation of the Pharisees, on account of his fidelity to her husband. Joseph. l. 13.

DIODENES, a cynical sophist, who declaimed with such vehemence and so openly against Titus for his intercourse with Berenice, as to provoke the resentment of the emperor. Dio. l. 66.

DIODENES, a prince of Chersonesus Taurus, assisted Constantine against the Goths, and was loaded with presents by the emperor. Constant. Porphyrog. de Administ. Imper.

DIOGENES, Romanus, vide Romanus IV.

DIOGENES (Biog.) a philosopher of Apollonia, and pupil to Anaxagoras, was celebrated for his knowledge of physic and philosophy. Cic. de Nat. Deor. l. 1, c. 29; Diog. Laert. in Vit.

DIOGENES, a cynic philosopher of Sinope, who, being banished from his native place for false swearing, turned philosopher, and by the eccentricity of his manners, and his doctrines, managed to procure for himself more distinction than he really deserved. He died A. C. 324, in the 96th year of his age, and his effigy, which has been preserved by statues of him, is given in Plate XXI. Cic. de Nat. Deor. l. 3; Diogen. in Vit.; Plut. in Apoph.

DIOGENES, a philosopher of Smyrna, and preceptor to Anaxarchus, lived about the same time as the preceding. Clemens Alexand. Strom. l. 1.

DIOGENES, Antonius, a Greek historian in the time of Alexander the Great, wrote an account of the island of Thule. Porphyr. in Vit. Pythag.; Phot. Cod. l. 66; Serv. in Virg.

DIOGENES, of Tarsus, was the author of poetical questions.

DIOGENES, Laertius, an historian, who flourished in the reign of Alexander Severus, and at the end of the second century wrote the Lives of the Philosophers, in 10 books, still extant. The best editions of Diogenes are that of Meibomius, 2 vols. 4to. Amst. 1692; and that of Leipsic, 8vo. 1759.

DIOGENIANUS (Biog.) a grammarian of Heraclea, in the reign of Adrian, who wrote a Dictionary and other things on the Art of Grammar.

DIOGNETUS (Hist.) an archon of Athens, and successor to Megacles, in whose time Homer is said to have flourished. Euseb. in Chron.

DIOGNETUS, a general of the Erythræans, whose life was saved through the interposition of his slave Polycrète. Polyæn. l. 8.

DIOGNETUS, a leader of the Megarians, whom Gelo contrived to circumvent by a stratagem. Polyæn. l. 5.

DIOGNETUS, an architect, and engineer of Rhodes, rendered great services to his country when attacked by Demetrius Poliorcetes, who was obliged in consequence to raise the siege of the city, which he had commenced in the 119th Olympiad.

DIOGNETUS (Biog.) a writer in the time of Alexander the Great, who composed an Itinerary. Plin. l. 6.

DIOGNETUS, a painter, who instructed the emperor M. Aurelius in his art.

DIOGNETUS, a philosopher, who instructed the same emperor in philosophy and writing dialogues. He is supposed to have been the same Diognetus to whom a letter extant in the works of St. Justin was addressed on the worship of the false gods. Ital. Capitol. in Mar. Aurel. Anton.

DIOMEDES (Myth.) Διομήδης, son of Tydeus and Deiphyle, and king of Ætolia, was one of the most illustrious heroes who went to the Trojan war. Homer distinguishes him by the epithets, ἀγαθός, βόην ἀγαθός, δούκελντος, κρατερός, υπέρβυμος Τυδείδης, &c. His wife, Ægiale, having proved unfaithful during his absence, he left his native country and settled in Apulia, where he built Arpos. It is fabled that his companions lamenting his death, were in their grief changed into the birds called Diomedea. Hom. Il. passim; Apollodor. l. 1; Virg. Æn.; Hygin. Fab. 97; Ovid. Met. l. 14.

DIOMEDES, a king of Thrace, son of Mars and Cyrene, who is said to have fed his horses on human flesh.

Ovid. in Ib.

Ut qui terribiles pro gramen habentibus herbis,
Impius humano rucere pavit equos.

Lucan. l. 2, v. 163.

— non Thracia tantum
Vidit Bristonii stabulis pendere tyranni.

Claudian. in Rufin. l. 1.

O mites Diomedes equi! Busiridos are Clementes!

It was one of the labours of Hercules to destroy this Diomedes. Apollodor. l. 2; Diodor. l. 4; Hygin. Fab. 30; Paus. l. 3.

DIOMEDES (Biog.) a grammarian, who is supposed to have lived before Priscian. His work on grammar, which is extant, is entitled, 'Diomedes Linguae Latinae perscrutator de Arte Grammatica,' fol. Venet. 1491, 1495, 1511, Paris, 1507; and also among the 'Grammatici Latini Veteres,' of Putschius, 1605.

DIOMEDON (Hist.) an Athenian general, put to death for his negligence at Arginuse.

DION (Hist.) Δίων, a Syracusan, son of Hipparinus, expelled his relation, Dionysius the tyrant, from the throne; and taking possession of the government was in his turn murdered by one of his friends, named Callicrates, A. C. 354, in the 58th year of his age. The Syracusans looking on him as a liberator paid great honours to his memory. Diod. l. 16; C. Nep. in Vit.

DION, Cassius, or Dio Cassius, a native of Bithynia, who held high offices in the state under Pertinax and his three successors, is better known by his History of Rome, which originally consisted of 80 books; but of these the first 31 are entirely lost; the 20 following are mutilated, and fragments only of the remainder are extant. Xiphilinus, of Trebizond, brother to the patriarch of Constantinople in the 11th century, abridged the works of Dion from the 35th to the 80th book; the best edition of which is that of Reimarus, Gr. and Lat. 2 vols. fol. 1750; but it was printed in the Greek only by Stephens, fol. Paris, 1548.

DION, Chrysostom (Biog.) the son of Pasicretes, a sophist, and orator of Prusias, in Bithynia, in the reigns of Nero, Vespasian, and Trajan, whose orations are still extant. The first edition of Dion Chrysostom was published in 4to. Mediol. 1476; the principal subsequent editions are 8vo. Venet. 1541; 4to. Paris, 1533; and fol. Paris, 1604. This Chrysostom is frequently confounded with St. John Chrysostom before-mentioned, under Chrysostom.

DIONE (Myth.) a daughter of Nereus and Doris, and mother of Venus by Jupiter. Hom. Il. l. 5; Virg. Æn. l. 5.

DIONIS, Peter (Biog.) a surgeon of Paris, who died in 1718, was the author of, 1. 'Histoire anatomique d'une Matrice extraordinaire,' 1683. 2. 'Anatomie de l'Homme suivant la Circulation du Sang,' &c. 3. 'Cours d'Operations de Chirurgie démontrée au Jardin Royal de Paris,' 8vo. 1707; published in Latin by Heister, with notes, and translated into most of the European languages. 4. 'Dissertation sur la Mort subite,' &c. 12mo. 1709. 5. 'Traité general des Accouchemens,' 8vo. 1718; which has been translated into most European languages.

DIONIS, du Sejour, Achilles Peter, a French astronomer, was born at Paris in 1734, and died in 1794, leaving, 1. 'Traité des Courbes algebriques,' 12mo. 1756. 2. 'Methode generale et directe pour résoudre les Problèmes relatifs aux Eclipses,' read in the Academy. 3. 'Recherches sur la Gnomonique et les Retrogradations des Planetes,' 8vo. 1761. 4. 'Traité analytique des Mouvements apparens des Corps Célestes,' 2 vols. 4to. 1774. 5. 'Essai sur les Comètes en general,' &c. 8vo. 1775. 6. 'Essai sur les Phénomènes relatifs aux Disparitions periodiques de l'Anneau de Saturne,' 8vo. 1776.

- DIONYSIA (Ecc.) a Christian matron, who, in the persecution of Huneric, king of the Vandals, suffered martyrdom in 483. Greg. Turon. Hist. l. 2.
- DIONYSIUS (Bibl.) Διονύσιος, the Areopagite, was made a convert to Christianity by the preaching of St. Paul. Acts xvii. 34. Subsequent writers state that this Dionysius, who was made bishop of Athens, suffered martyrdom A. D. 95. Euseb. in Chron.; Martyrol. Roman. &c.
- DIONYSIUS (Myth.) one of the surnames of Bacchus.
- DIONYSIUS (Hist.) a commander of the Ionian fleet against the Persians, who went to plunder Phœnicia. Herod. l. 6.
- DIONYSIUS, a tyrant of Heraclea, in Pontus, in the age of Alexander the Great, who married Amestris, the niece of Darius, and assumed the name of king. He died in the 55th year of his age, much lamented by his subjects. Phot. Bibl. 224.
- DIONYSIUS I, otherwise styled the Elder, the son of Hermocrates, having signalized himself in the wars of the Syracusans against the Carthaginians, contrived to obtain the supreme power at Syracuse, and died after a reign of 38 years, A. C. 368, in the 63d year of his age. Xenophon. Hellen. l. 2; Diodor. l. 13; C. Nep. in Timol.; Justin. l. 20; Plut. in Dion.
- DIONYSIUS II, or the Younger, son and successor of the preceding, was expelled from Syracuse by his relative, Dion, whom he had banished; and recovering his power ten years after, he was a second time expelled by the Corinthians under Timoleon. He retired to Corinth, where he is said to have kept a school. Diodor. l. 15; Cic. in Tusc. l. 5; C. Nep. in Dion.; Ælian. Var. Hist. l. 9.
- DIONYSIUS, a king of Egypt. [Vide Ptolemy XII]

- DIONYSIUS (Numis.) the few medals of Dionysius the Elder, tyrant of Syracuse, which are extant, bear, as is supposed, the head of Mars, and not his own head, and also half a horse, with the triangle, the common symbol of Sicily; the inscription, ΔΙΟΝΥΣΙΟΥ and Σ for ΣΥΡΑΚΟΥΣΙΩΝ. One medal is ascribed to the younger Dionysius, bearing, as in the annexed cut, his effigy; inscription on the reverse, ΒΑΣΙΛΕΥΣ ΔΙΟΝΥΣΙΟΥ. Goltz. Sicil. T. 13; Parut. Sicil. Descrip.
- DIONYSIUS (Ecc.) succeeded S. Sixtus as pope on the martyrdom of the latter, A. D. 258, and was succeeded by Felix I, in 272, after having held a synod, in which the heresies of Sabellius were condemned. S. Athanas. ad Arian. &c.; St. Basil. ep. 220; Anastas. de Rom. Pont.; Baron. Annal.; Du Pin, Biblioth.
- DIONYSIUS, St., a patriarch of Alexandria, succeeded Heracles in 248, and after being expelled his see, and again restored, he died in 265, leaving many works, mentioned by St. Jerom, which are lost. Euseb. Hist. Eccles. l. 6; Athanas. de Sent. Dion. &c.; S. Basil. de Spir. S. Ep. ad Amptul.; Hieron. Cat.
- DIONYSIUS, St., first bishop of Paris in the third century, suffered martyrdom by having his head cut off in the reign of Decius. His life was written by Gregory of Tours, Fortunatus, and Usuard.
- DIONYSIUS, bishop of Milan in 350, was banished in 355 to Cappadocia, for refusing to sign the condemnation of St. Athanasius, and died soon after. S. Athanas. ad Solit.; S. Ambros. ep. 82; S. Hilar. Frag. l. 1; Socrat. Hist. Eccles. l. 1; Sozom. l. 1; Sulpic. Sever. Hist. Sac. l. 2; Baron. Annal. ann. 350.
- DIONYSIUS, a native of Peloponnesus, was reduced to captivity on the taking of Constantinople in 1453; but being afterwards released, he was elevated to that see, which he abdicated after governing the church for eight years. Spondan. Annal. Contin. ann. 1461.
- DIONYSIUS (Biog.) an historian of Miletos, anterior to Herodotus, whose works are spoken of by Suidas.
- DIONYSIUS, an epic poet of Mitylene, who wrote some fables. Suidas.
- DIONYSIUS, a philosopher of Heraclea, and disciple to Zeno, who starved himself to death. A. C. 279. Diogen. Laert. in Vit.
- DIONYSIUS, the Theban, a poet and musician, who taught music to Epaminondas.
- DIONYSIUS, a grammarian, who taught rhetoric at Rome, in the time of Pompey the Great.
- DIONYSIUS, surnamed Halicarnassensis, an historian of Halicarnassus, who went to Rome A. C. 30, is well known by his Roman Antiquities, which originally consisted of 20 books; but of these the first 11 only are extant. He also wrote on Rhetoric, and other subjects, part of which still remains. The best editions of his works are that of Oxford, 2 vols. fol. 1704; and that of Reiske, 6 vols. 8vo.
- DIONYSIUS, a slave of Cicero, who, after plundering his master's library, fled and joined the opposite faction in the civil wars. Cic. ad Att. l. 9.
- DIONYSIUS, M. Pomponius, a slave or freedman of Atticus, whom Cicero employed in disposing his library. Cic. ad Att. l. 4.
- DIONYSIUS, surnamed Periegetes, a geographer in the Augustan age, wrote, besides other pieces which are lost, a geographical treatise, still extant, entitled 'Periegesis,' consisting of 1186 verses, in Greek hexameters. The best editions of this treatise are that of Henry Stephens, 4to. 1577, with the Scholia of Eustathius; and that of Hill, 8vo. Lond. 1688.
- DIONYSIUS, a sophist of Halicarnassus, and a descendant of the historian before-mentioned, composed, among other things, a treatise on Music; he is also believed to be the author of the 'Interpretation,' which is generally attributed to Demetrius Phalereus.
- DIONYSIUS, a sophist of Miletus in the reign of Adrian, by whom he was promoted to be governor, and was afterwards disgraced. Philost. Soph. 22.
- DIONYSIUS, priest of the sun, at Rhodes, is mentioned by Tertullian. Tert. de Anima, c. 46.
- DIONYSIUS, surnamed Exiguus, or the Little, on account of his stature, a monk in the sixth century, is principally known as a chronologer. He introduced the present vulgar era, or mode of reckoning time from the birth of our Saviour; and also invented a cycle of 95 years; besides making a collection of canons.
- DIONYSIUS, a name common to many other ancient writers.
- DIOPHANTUS (Hist.) an Athenian general, of the Greek mercenary troops in the service of Nectanebus, king of Egypt. Diodor. l. 16.
- DIOPHANTUS, secretary to Herod the Great, being skilled in imitating the hand-writing of others, was bribed by Antipater to write a letter in the name of Alexander against his father, which was the cause of his death, and that of his brother Aristobulus.
- DIOPHANTUS (Biog.) or Diophanes, an orator of Mitylene in the 158th Olympiad, A. C. 148, was preceptor to Tiberius Gracchus. Cic. in Brut. c. 27.
- DIOPHANTUS, a mathematician of Alexandria, who is supposed to have flourished in the reign of Nero, or his immediate successors, was the author of thirteen books of Arithmetic, which has given rise to the present system of algebra. Of this work no more than six whole books, with part of a seventh, have been published, although, according to Regiomontanus, the work is still preserved entire in MS. in the Vatican Library; but this has been contradicted by Bombelli, in the preface to his Algebra. These books were published at Basil, by Xylander, in 1575; but in a Latin version only, with the Greek Scholia of Maximus Planudes on the first two books; the same books were afterwards published in Gr. and Lat. Paris, 1621, by Bachel. From this author certain questions relating to square and cubic numbers, and to right-angled triangles, have been called Diophantine Problems.

DIOSCORIDES (Biog.) a Greek author, who wrote a treatise on the Republic of Sparta, quoted by Athenæus. Voss. Hist. Græc. l. 3.

DIOSCORIDUS, Pedacius, a physician of Anazarba, in Cilicia, was the author of a book on Materia Medica; of which the best edition is that of Saracenus, fol. Francof. 1598. He is supposed to have flourished in the time of Anthony, or, according to others, in the reign of Nero. [Vide Plate XXXIII] Galen. Præf. Med. Simpl. l. 4; Phol. Bibl. Cod. 178.

DIOSCORUS (Hist.) a consul and colleague of Eudoxius, U. C. 1195.

DIOSCOURUS (Ecc.) the name of two patriarchs of Alexandria. DIOSCOURUS I, followed the errors of Eutychius; and, after causing much trouble to the church, was at length banished to Paphlagonia, where he died in 458. S. Leo. ep. 7; Idal. et Prosp. in Chron.; Nicéphor. Hist. Eccles. l. 14; Concil. II. Ephes.; Baron. Annal. ann. 439, &c.

DIOSCOURUS II, surnamed the Younger, succeeded in 517 John, surnamed Machiota, in the patriarchate; but, being regarded as a heretic, his election caused a sedition; nevertheless he governed the church until 519. Liberat. Brev. 19.

Dioscorus, an antipope, opposed to Boniface II, had a supporter in Athalaric, king of the Goths; but his death, a few days after his election, opportunely prevented the schism which must have taken place. He is supposed to be the Dioscorus sent by pope Hormisdas as a legate into the east to the emperor Justinian. Justinian. Edict.; Anastas. in Agapal.; Baron. Annal. ann. 530.

DIOSCURI (Myth.) Διόσκουροι, a name given to Castor and Pollux.

DIOSCURI (Numis.) are represented very frequently together on coins or medals, particularly on those struck by the consuls, either standing, naked, or on horseback, having their heads covered with a cap or a helmet, and spears in their hands, as in the annexed figures. [Vide Castor and Pollux] Their heads are frequently surmounted by two stars.

DIOSCURIAS (Geog.) a town of Colchis, which was said to have been built by Castor and Pollux. Mel. l. 1, c. 19; Plin. l. 6, &c.

DIOSCURIAS (Numis.) the inhabitants of this town commemorated their supposed origin from the DioscURI, by the two caps and the stars, which were symbolical of Castor and Pollux; the inscription ΔΙΟΣΚΟΥΡΙΑΔΟ.

DIOSHERIS (Numis.) or Dioshieris, a town of Lydia, principally known by the medals of the emperors Augustus, Trajan, Julia Domna, Caracalla, Geta, Heliogabalus, and Alexander Severus; and also while an independent state, bearing the inscription ΔΙΟΚΙΕΠΙΤΩΝ. Mus. Pemb. t. viii. p. 2.

DIOSPOLIS (Geog.) the name of two towns; namely, one in Egypt, and one in Palestine; in the latter of which a council was held in 415 against Pelagius. S. August. Retract. l. 2; S. Hieron. ep. 79; Baron. Annal. ann. 415.

DIOSPOLIS (Numis.) the name of these two towns is preserved on medals, particularly of the former town, bearing the inscription ΔΙΟΧΟΛΑΕΙΤΩΝ, vel ΔΙΟΧΟΛΑΙ. Medals struck by the latter in honour of Julia Domna bear the inscription ΔΙΟΧΟΛΑΙC, together with the number of their epocha EP, &c. anno 105, or A. U. C. 951, dated from the reign of Domitian.

DIOTIMUS (Hist.) a naval commander of Athens, who gained many victories over the Lacedæmonians. Polyæn. l. 5.

His chief fame at present rests on his 'Pemptades,' or 30 Books of the History of Plants, in fol. Antv. 1533, 1612, and 1616. He likewise wrote previously, 1. 'Frugum Historia,' Ant. 1552. 2. 'Herbarium Belgicum,' published in the German in 1553 and in 1557; which last was translated by Clusius into the French. 3. 'Florum et Coronariarum Odoratarumque nonnullarum Herbarum Historia,' 8vo. Antv. 1561.

DODONA (Geog.) Δωδώνη, a town of Threspotia, in Epirus, said to have been built by Deucalion, after the deluge, which was famous for the oracles of Jupiter Dodonæus, reported to be delivered from the sacred oaks in the grove that surrounded Jupiter's temple.

Ovid. Inst. l. 4, cl. 8.

*Hec mihi si Delphos, Dodonæque digerere ipsa,
Esse videretur vñus uterque locus.*

Prop. l. 2.

Sec. tibi jam videtur Dodonæ perierit augur.

Claudian de Rapt. Proserpini.

Obserit inventis Dodonæ querous aristas.

Kettles were suspended from these oaks, which kept up a continual clattering, whence the term "Dodoneum us." for a sort of kettle drum.

Virg. Æn. l. 3.

DOMINGO, St. (Geog.) Hispaniola, or, in the language of the natives, Hayti, one of the largest of the West India islands, lying between Jamaica and Cuba on the west, and Porto Rico on the east, extending from about 17 to 20 north latitude, and from 67 to 74 west longitude. This was discovered by Columbus, who landed at a small bay called St. Nicholas, in 1492. The Spaniards remained undisputed masters of this island until about the 16th century, when the Buccaneers, a predatory tribe, consisting of French and English adventurers, gained a footing, and became the subjects of France at the peace of Ryswick, when a portion of the territory was ceded to it. At the French Revolution, the Black population rose in a mass against their masters, and after a desperate struggle, obtained not only their liberty, but also entire possession of the whole island; which was for a time governed by Dessalines, a military chief, who being put to death, two other chiefs, namely, Pétion and Christophe, succeeded in establishing a government, for which a democracy has since been substituted. St. Domingo, the capital of this island, which was originally built by Columbus, on the western bank of the river Ozama, in 1496, was destroyed by a hurricane in 1502, and rebuilt on the opposite bank. Lon. 69° 50' W., lat. 18° 25' N.

- DOUGLAS (Hist.) or as it was anciently written Duglas, William de, of the illustrious family mentioned under Heraldry, commenced the career of military glory, which was run by this family through many generations; and, although not successful against Edward I of England, by whom he was besieged in Berwick, and taken prisoner, yet he acquired the surname of Hardy for his valour, and died in 1302.
- DOUGLAS, James de, his eldest son, who acquired the appellation of the Good Sir James, was the associate of Robert Bruce in his arduous attempts to restore the liberties of Scotland, to which this sir James contributed in an extraordinary degree, and signalized himself on many occasions, particularly at the battle of Bannockburn, where he commanded the left wing of the Scottish army. He afterwards undertook a journey to Jerusalem with king Robert's heart, in conformity with a vow made by that monarch; and, having there joined the standard of the king of Arragon against the infidels, he was killed in 1331. For this service he had a man's heart added to his armorial bearings.
- DOUGLAS, Sir William, natural son of the preceding, after performing many feats against the English, was taken, with his sovereign king David II, at the battle of Durham in 1346. He obtained his freedom upon dishonourable terms, and was slain by sir William Douglas, his father's nephew.
- DOUGLAS, Archibald, brother of the preceding, was taken prisoner at the battle of Poitiers; but, making his escape, he settled at Bourdeaux, and was the founder of several families of that name in France.
- DOUGLAS, Archibald, earl of Douglas and Marr, and brother of sir James Douglas before-mentioned, became regent of France in 1333; but having entered into England against Edward III, his forces were routed, and he himself, being mortally wounded, was taken prisoner.
- DOUGLAS, William de, son of the preceding, who waylaid and assassinated his relation before-mentioned, was wounded at the battle of Poitiers in 1356; and, after being engaged in desultory warfare with the English borderers, he died in 1384.
- DOUGLAS, James, Earl of, also earl of Marr, son of the preceding, signalized himself at the battle of Otterburn, where he fell in 1388.
- DOUGLAS, Archibald, third Earl of, surnamed the Grim, after being taken prisoner at the battle of Poitiers, and making his escape, he distinguished himself by his prowess, which rendered him formidable to his enemies.
- DOUGLAS, Archibald, fourth Earl of, and Duke of Touraine, obtained a signal victory over the earl of March and Henry Percy in 1401, but was taken prisoner by the latter at the battle of Homildon in 1402, after having been wounded in five places, and lost an eye. He afterwards assisted Charles VII in France, and fell at the battle of Verneuil, in Normandy, in 1424.
- DOUGLAS, William, sixth Earl of, and third Duke of Touraine, was assassinated by the Chancellor Crichton in 1440.
- DOUGLAS, eighth Earl of, having entered into a formidable league, with the earls of Crawford and Ross, against his king, James II, he was stabbed by the latter in consequence of his insolent behaviour during a conference, when sir Patrick Gray dispatched him with a battle axe.
- DOUGLAS, James, ninth Earl of, set himself up in open rebellion against king James; but being deserted by all his followers, he fled into England. He was afterwards taken prisoner, and, being condemned to a religious retirement, he died a monk in 1488. His two brothers, the earls of Moray and Ormond, were taken and executed for having joined in his rebellion.
- DOUGLAS, William, first Marquis of, and eleventh earl of Angus, was engaged in the royal cause during the rebellion, and died in 1660.
- DOUGLAS, the name of several branches of the same family, who distinguished themselves both in a civil and military capacity.
- DOUGLAS, Sir William, the first Baron of Drumlanrig, signalized himself in the wars against the English in 1411. He was sent in 1412 into England, as ambassador, to solicit the release of king James I.
- DOUGLAS, William, second Lord of Drumlanrig, contributed by his valour to the victory gained over the English in 1448, at the battle of Sark.
- DOUGLAS, William, the third Lord of Drumlanrig, displayed his valour on many occasions, particularly at the battle of Roxburgh, where king James lost his life.
- DOUGLAS, William, fourth Lord of Drumlanrig, was slain in the service of his country at the battle of Kirkcubright, fought by the duke of Albany, against his brother James II.
- DOUGLAS, James, seventh Lord, was one of the barons who attempted to rescue king James V from the hands of Angus, by whom he was kept in a state of thralldom.
- DOUGLAS, James, eighth Lord of Drumlanrig, was a happy instrument by his wisdom and prudence in reconciling the discords among the contending factions of the court, which disturbed the reign of James V, until his accession to the English throne.
- DOUGLAS, Sir William, Lord of Lidysdale, who, for his bravery, was called the Flower of Chivalry, died without issue in 1356.
- DOUGLAS, vide Queensbury.
- DOUGLAS, vide Morton.
- DOUGLAS, Gavin (Ecc.) bishop of Dunkeld, and third son of Archibald Douglas, earl of Angus, was born in 1475, promoted to the bishopric of Dunkeld through the interest of the queen-mother, and after having lived peaceably in troublesome times, he died at London in 1521 or 1522, leaving the reputation of a learned and temperate man. He translated the Aeneid into Scottish heroics, which was printed under the title of 'The XIII Bukes of Encidos, of the famous Poet Virgill, translated out of Latyne Verses into Scottish Meter,' &c. 4to. London, 1543, and fol. Edinburgh, 1710; to which was added, a Glossary and a Life, by Ruldiman. Besides this work, he also translated Ovid's 'De Remedio Amoris,' which seems to have been the first of all his works; and wrote 'The Palace of Honour,' 4to. London, 1553, and Edinburgh, 1579; 'King Hart,' published from the original MS. by Mr. Pinkerton, in his 'Ancient Scottish Poems,' 1786.
- DOUGLAS, John, son of Archibald Douglas, a merchant of Pittenween, in Fifeshire, was born in 1721, educated at Oxford, and after having been some time in the army, took orders, and passing through various preferments, he was in 1791 promoted to the see of Salisbury, and died in 1807. Besides political pamphlets, of which he wrote a number, he published, 1. 'Milton Vindicated from the Charge of Plagiarism,' &c. which had been brought against him by Lauder. 2. 'The Criterion, or Miracles Examined,' &c. in a letter to Dr. Adam Smith, 1754. 3. 'An Apology for the Clergy,' &c. 1755.
- DOUGLAS (Her.) the name of a Scottish house, which for grandeur of alliances, and military prowess, is excelled by none, and equalled by few in that country. It was matched eleven times with the royal house of Scotland, and once with that of England; besides the high distinctions which it acquired in the state, and the brilliancy of its exploits in the field, it received numerous honours, both from its own sovereigns, and also from those of France. This family is descended from Theobald, a Fleming, who received a grant of some lands on Douglas-water, whence he is said to have taken his surname. William de Douglas, his descendant, was created earl of Douglas, and by his marriage became also earl of Murr, in the reign of king David the second. Archibald, the fourth earl of Douglas, received a grant from Charles VII, of the duchy of Touraine, and at the death of the third duke of Touraine, the duchy reverted to the crown of France. George Douglas, only son of William, the first earl of Douglas, became earl of Angus, in right of his mother; William, the eleventh earl of Angus, was created in 1633, marquis of Douglas; and Archibald, the third marquis, was created duke of Douglas, which title became extinct at his death in 1761. Archibald Stewart, esq. nephew to the duke of Douglas, having been returned his lineal heir, this return was disputed by the duke of Hamilton, who gaining the cause, so well known by the name of the Douglas cause, succeeded to the marquissate of Douglas, and the other titles; whilst, on the other hand, his rival became entitled, by the judgment of the Scotch courts, to the estates and name of Douglas, and was created a British peer, by the title of lord Douglas, of Douglas Castle.

DOUGLAS, of Drumlanrig, a branch of the same family, is descended from William, the son of James, second earl of Douglas, who gave him by charter the barony of Drumlanrig. Sir William Douglas, son of the eighth lord of Drumlanrig, was created in 1628 lord viscount Drumlanrig, and earl of Queensbury; and William, the third earl of Queensbury, was further advanced in 1682 to the dignities of lord Douglas, of Kircmont, Middlebie, viscount of Nith, and earl of Drumlanrig and Sanquhar, and marquis of Queensbury; and finally, in 1684, he was elevated to the honours of marquis of Dumfriesshire, and duke of Queensbury. The second duke of Queensbury was created a peer of Great Britain, by the titles of baron Rippon, marquis of Beverley, and duke of Dover; which honours were to descend to his second son, the earl of Galloway; but when the latter came of age, and claimed his seat in the English House of Peers, as duke of Dover, the House construed the articles of Union to restrain the king from conferring an English peerage on a Scotch peer; a construction which was reversed in the course of the last reign.

DOUGLAS of Lochleven, another branch of the same family, descended from sir James Douglas, enjoys the title of earl of Morton, which was first conferred on sir James Douglas, by James II in 1457. [Vide Morton]

DOUGLAS, the name of a branch of the Douglas family, lineally descended from the first earl of Douglas, which also enjoys the title of lord Glenbervie, conferred in 1800 on Sylvester Douglas. [Vide Glenbervie]

DOUGLAS, other branches of the same family enjoyed for a time the titles of duke of Athol, earl of Belhaven, and earl of Buchan. The arms of this family are as follow:

Arms. Argent, a man's heart gules, ensigned with an imperial crown proper, on a chief azure, three stars of the first.

DOUGLAS, the name of two branches of the above-mentioned family, which enjoy the dignity and title of a baronet.

DOUGLAS of Cars, a branch which is immediately descended from the sixth earl of Morton, received this honour in the person of sir Charles Douglas, on whom it was conferred in 1777, for his meritorious services in the relief of Quebec.

DOUGLAS of Springwood Park, first received this honour in the person of sir James Douglas, of the royal navy, on whom it was conferred in 1786, for his naval services in America. Both these branches bear the family arms of Douglas.

DUNALLEY, Lord (Her.) baron Dunalley, of Kilboy, co. Tipperary, a title enjoyed by the family of Prittie. [Vide Prittie]

DUNBAR, Waldene, fourth Earl of (Hist.) of the family of Dunbar and March, was one of the hostages for the performance of the treaty for the release of king William I of Scotland, from captivity, in 1174.

DUNBAR, Patrick, sixth Earl of, son of the preceding, was a guarantee for two treaties between Alexander II, of Scotland, and Henry II, of England; and died at Damietta, in Egypt, in 1248, while on the crusade with Louis IX of France.

DUNBAR, Patrick, seventh Earl of, was one of the English faction during the turbulent minority of Alexander III; and heading a party, surprized the Castle of Edinburgh, and got Alexander III and his queen out of the power of the Cumyns. He was afterwards one of the regents of the kingdom, and died in 1289, at the age of 76.

DUNBAR, Patrick, eighth Earl of, who is also styled Earl of March, was one of the competitors for the crown of Scotland, to which he entered a formal claim at Berwick in 1291, as the great-grandson of Ada, daughter of William the Lion; but his claim was soon withdrawn, and swearing fealty to Edward I, in 1291, he afterwards steadily adhered to the English interest during the wars of that time, until his death in 1302. His wife, favouring the Scots, retained the Castle of Dunbar for Baliol, until she was obliged to surrender that important place to Edward I.

DUNBAR and MARCH, Patrick, ninth Earl of, received Edward II after the battle of Bannockburn, in 1314, into his Castle at Dunbar; but made his peace with his cousin, Robert I, until the successes of Edward III compelled him to seek the protection of the conqueror; for whom he engaged to repair his Castle of Dunbar, and garrison it with English. He however again renounced his allegiance to Edward III; and while he was engaged in the field against the English forces, his countess, the Black Agnes, daughter of Randolph, earl of Moray, defended the Castle of Dunbar against the earl of Salisbury, whom she compelled to retire after a siege of 19 weeks. The earl of Dunbar commanded the left wing of the royal army at the fatal battle of Durham in 1346, and after being one of the sureties for the release of David II, of Scotland, he died about 1368.

DUNBAR and MARCH, George, tenth Earl of, son of the preceding, was much engaged in border warfare; but the duke of Rothsay, son of king Robert III, having violated the contract of marriage, which he had entered into with lady Elizabeth Dunbar, daughter of the earl of March, the latter renounced his allegiance to Robert, and put himself under the protection of Henry IV, for whom he was engaged at the battle of Halidon-hill in 1402. The earl of March returned to Scotland in 1409; was one of the commissioners for negotiating a truce with England in 1411; and died in 1420, at the age of 82.

DUNBAR, Sir Patrick, fourth son of the preceding, was taken prisoner at the battle of Halidon in 1402; was one of the hostages for James I, in England, in 1426; and ambassador with his brother, the earl of March, in 1429.

DUNBAR, Sir David, of Cockburn, sixth son of George, the tenth earl, was the first that came to the assistance of king James I, when attacked by his assassins in 1437; and after having slain one, he was overpowered and left disabled.

DUNBAR and MARCH, eleventh Earl of, succeeded his father; but after being employed on various public transactions, particularly in making the frequent truces with England at that time, he was in 1434 imprisoned for holding his earldom and estates, which had been forfeited by his father's guilt; and, notwithstanding the plea which he offered of his father's pardon by the regent Albany, the forfeiture was confirmed by parliament; and the family of Dunbar, which had hitherto enjoyed the greatest splendour, was reduced to comparative obscurity.

DUNBAR, George Home, Earl of, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was soon distinguished at the court of James VI, whose favour he gained by his extraordinary talent, which he displayed in whatever he undertook. He attended the king into England; was sworn of his Privy Council in 1604; appointed High Commissioner to the general assembly of the church of Scotland in 1606; and died in 1611.

DUNBAR and MARCH, Earl of (Her.) a title long enjoyed by the descendants of Cospatrick, earl of Northumberland, until its forfeiture by George, the eleventh earl, as mentioned under History; when the title and estates of that family were vested in the crown.

DUNBAR, Earl of, this title was revived in the person of George Home, of Berwick above-mentioned, who in 1604 was created baron Home, of Berwick, and earl of Dunbar, of Scotland; which titles became dormant at his death.

DUNBAR, a family of Proath, in the county of Nairn, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1814 on sir James Dunbar, knt.; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

DUNBAR, William (Biog.) a Scotch poet, was born in 1465 and died in 1580. Among his poems are 'The Thistle and the Rose'; 'The twa Marrit Women and the Wedo'; 'The Freirs of Berwick,' &c.; a collection of which was published in 1770, by sir David Dalrymple, with notes by way of illustration.

DUNCAN (Hist.) the name of two Scottish kings, Duncan I, otherwise called Donald VII, grandson of Malcolm II, mounted the throne in 1034, after the death of his grandfather, and was murdered by the usurper Macbeth, after a reign of seven years, in which he succeeded in expelling the Danes.

DUNCAN II, natural son of Malcolm III, usurped the throne from Edgar, the eldest legitimate son of the latter; but was killed soon after by one Malpedir the thane, or earl of Menteith. His effigy is given, as in the annexed figure.

DUNCAN, Adam, Viscount, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was born in 1731, and, being bred to the navy, he honourably rose through the several gradations of rank, until he reached that of admiral in 1789; after which, in 1795, he obtained a signal victory over the Dutch fleet, at Camperdown, off the coast of Holland, when the admiral's ship, and several others, were taken or destroyed; for which signal service he was rewarded with the peerage. [Vide Plate XVI]

DUNCAN, (Her.) the name of a family of Lundie, one branch of which enjoyed the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1764 on William Duncan, a physician, which title became extinct at his death. Adam Duncan, his nephew, the admiral above-mentioned, was created in 1795 a baron and viscount of Great Britain, by the titles of baron Camperdown and viscount Duncan; their arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. In the centre of his paternal coat (being gules, two cinque-foils in chief, and a bugle-horn in base, stringed azure) pendant by a ribbon argent and azure, from a naval crown or, a gold medal, thereon two figures the emblems of Victory and Britannia, Victory alighting on the prow of an antique vessel, crowning Britannia with a wreath of laurel, and below the word "Camperdown."

Crest. A first-rate ship of war with masts proper, rigging torn and in disorder, floating on the sea all proper; and over the motto "Disce pati."

Supporters. On the dexter side an angel, mantle purple; on the head a celestial crown, the right hand supporting an anchor proper, in the left a palm-branch or; on the sinister a sailor habited and armed proper, his left hand supporting a staff; thereon hoisted a flag azure, the Dutch colours wreathed about the middle of the staff.

Motto. "Secundis, dubiisque rectus."

DUNCAN, Mark (Biog.) a Scotchman, but a professor of philosophy at Saumur in the 17th century, was the author of 'Institutiones Logicæ;' and some works on theology.

DUNCAN, Mark, a son of the preceding, known by the name of Cerisantes, wrote, among other things, 'Carmen Gratulatorium in Nuptias Caroli R. Aug. cum Henrietta Maria Filia Henrici IV. R. Fr.'

DUNCAN, Daniel, a physician of the same family, was born at Montauban, in Languedoc, in 1649, and died in 1735, leaving, 1. 'Explication Nouvelle et Mechanique des Actions Animales,' Paris. 1678; a Latin edition of which was printed in London in 1679. 2. 'La Chymie Naturelle, ou Explication Chymique et Mechanique de la Nourriture de l'Animal,' 1683; and a second edition, with two other parts, was published at Paris in 1687. 3. - DUVAL, William, a relation of the preceding, is known as the editor of Aristotle, published in 2 vols. fol. 1619.
- DUVAL, Valentine Jamerai, the son of a labourer of Artonay, in Champagne, who died in 1775, aged 80; succeeded by his natural talents and extraordinary application in acquiring such familiarity with the sciences, particularly geography, that he was nominated in 1751, preceptor to prince Joseph. His works, with Memoirs of his Life, were published at Paris in 2 vols. 8vo. 1784.

DYCHE, Thomas (Biog.) a clergyman and schoolmaster, who died in 1750, is well known as the author of an English Dictionary, Spelling-Book, and other School Books.

DYER (Hist.) Dier, or Deyer, Sir James, a lawyer, descended from an ancient and honourable family in Somersetshire, was born about the year 1512, appointed reader in the Middle Temple in 1530, Speaker of the House of Commons in 1552, one of the queen's serjeants in 1553, when he sat as one of the commissioners on the trial of sir Nicholas Throckmorton. In 1557 he was made one of the Judges of the Common Pleas, and Chief Justice in 1559, when he assisted at the trial of Thomas Howard, duke of Norfolk; and after having discharged his office with singular probity and talent, he died in 1582, leaving among his works as an author, a large book of Reports, published after his death, printed in 1585, 1592, 1601, 1606, 1621, and 1672, 1688, &c.; which last, translated from the French, was published under the title of 'Reports of several select Matters and Resolutions of the Reverend Judges and Sages of the Law,' &c. and enriched by the marginal notes of lord chief justice Treby. The best editions of these Reports, is that of John Vaillant, esq. 3 vols. 8vo. 1794, with a Life of the author, from an original MS., in the Inner Temple library. He also left behind him 'A Reading upon the Statute of 32 Hen. VIII. c. 1. of Wills, and upon the 34th and 35th Hen. VIII. c. 5, for the Explanation of the Statute,' printed at London in 4to. 1648.

DYER, Sir Edward, a lawyer and poet, a descendant from the preceding, who died in 1581, aged 70, was successively serjeant at law, Speaker of the House of Commons, one of the Judges of the Common Pleas and King's Bench, and lastly, Chief Justice of the King's Bench. Some of his pastoral Odes and Madrigals are in 'England's Helicon,' besides which he wrote 'A Description of Friendship,' a poem in the Ashmolean Museum, and some of his verses are in MS. in the Bodleian Library.

DYER (Her.) the name of a family, probably a branch of that mentioned under History, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1678 upon William Dyer. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Or, a chief indented gules.

Crest. Out of a ducal coronet or, a goat's head sable, armed of the first.

DYER, John (Biog.) a poet of Caermarthenshire, was born in 1700, and died in 1758. His 'Grongar-Hill,' 'The Fleeco,' and 'The Ruins of Rome,' have given Dyer a respectable rank among English poets. [Vide Plate XXIX]

DYER, Samuel, a writer, was born about 1725, and died in 1772. He edited Plutarch's Lives in 1758, but is more known as a member of the Literary Club, and the associate of the learned, than for any of his literary labours.

DYMAS (Myth.) a Trojan, who, having put on the armour of a Greek, was among the number of those slain by his own countrymen. Virg. Æn. l. 2.

DYMNUS (Hist.) one of Alexander's officers, who conspired against his master's life, and being discovered, stabbed himself before he was taken. Curt. l. 6.

DYRRACHIUM (Geog.) Δυρράχιον, otherwise called Epidamnus, now Durazzo, a town of Macedonia, bordering on the Adriatic, was founded by a colony from Coreyra, A. C. 623. It was the common landing-place from Brundisium, and was therefore called Iadriae Tubernæ, where Cicero was received during his exile.

Lucan. l. 6.

DYRRHACHIUM (Numis.) most of the medals of this city bear a square in the obverse, symbolical of the gardens of Alcinous; and on the reverse, a cow suckling a calf, which, from their resemblance with those on the medals of Coreyra, sufficiently testify their origin as a colony of the Coreyrians. Their medals also bear the head of Minerva, a club, or the head of Hercules; because Phalius, the Corinthian, who lead the colony to Dyrrachium, deduced his origin from Hercules. Their other types were the prow of a ship, or a plough, &c., which were also the common symbols of Coreyra. The inscriptions, besides ΔΥΡ, for Dyrrachium, consisted of the name of some person, either of a magistrate, or a moneyer, &c.

DYSART, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Tollemache, [vide Tollemache] which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Tollemache, earl of Dysart, and baron Huntingdon, and a baronet.

Arms. Azure, an imperial crown or, between three stars argent, within a double tressure, flowered, and counter-flowered of the second.

Crest. A mermaid holding a mirror in her right hand, and in her left a comb, all proper.

Supporters. Two lions gules, collared azure, charged with three stars argent.

E.

EACHARD, John (Biog.) master of Catherine Hall, Cambridge, was born of a good family in the county of Suffolk, about 1696, and died in 1697, leaving, 1. 'The Grounds and Occasions of the Contempt of the Clergy and Religion enquired into,' &c. 1670, which called forth answers and rejoinders. 2. 'Mr. Hobbes's State of Nature considered,' &c. 1671. 3. 'A Second Dialogue between Philantus and Timothy,' a sequel to the preceding, which followed it quickly. A complete edition of these works was published in 3 vols. 12mo. by T. Davies, in 1774. To him is also attributed, in the catalogue of the British Museum, a piece entitled 'A Free and Impartial Enquiry into the Causes of that very great Esteem and Honour that the Nonconformist Preachers are generally in with their Followers,' &c.

EADMER (Ecc.) the faithful friend and biographer of archbishop Anselm, was elected bishop of St. Andrew's in 1120, but claiming to be consecrated by the archbishop of Canterbury, and Alexander, king of Scotland, refusing to admit the supremacy of the archiepiscopal see over that of St. Andrew's, he declined accepting the bishopric. He is now

- best known by a History of the Affairs of his own Time, the best edition of which was published by Selden, under the title of 'Eadmeri Monachi Cantuariensis Historie Novorum sive sui Seculi, Libri Sex', fol. Lond. 1623. Besides which he wrote a Life of St. Anselm, St. Wilfred, and others, published in Wharton's 'Anglia Sacra'.

EGYPT (Geog.) an extensive kingdom of Northern Africa, of which an ample account has already been given under its ancient name of Ægyptus, where its modern towns, &c. are also spoken of.

History of Modern Egypt.

The modern history of Egypt commences with the conquest of this country by the Saracens, under the khalifate of Omar, and the command of his successful general Amru Ebn Abaz. From this time Egypt continued in subjection to the khalifs of Bagdad, until the year of the Hegira 286, A. D. 896; when Abu Mohammed Obeidallah, the famed founder of the Fatemite dynasty in Africa, set up a new khalifate at Kairwan, and took the title of Mehdi or Al Mohdi, i. e. "Director of the Faithful," whose successors reigned there for upwards of 300 years, in the following order: 1. Abu Mohammed Obaidallah, or Mehdi. 2. Al Kayam. 3. Al Mansar. 4. Moez Ledinillah. 5. Asis, or Al Asis. 6. Al Hakem. 7. Dhaher. 8. Mostanser. 9. Mostali. 10. Amer, or Hamer. 11. Haffedh. 12. Dhaffer. 13. Faaz, or Al Faaz. 14. Hadhed, or Aded. All these, from the fourth, took likewise the title of Ledinillah from him, which signifies "The Faith, or Religion of God." At the death of Al Aded, whose power had long been reduced to a mere name, the khalifate of the Fatemites was abolished, and Egypt fell into the hands of the conqueror Saladin, in the year of the Hegira 366, A. D. 976; since which period it has become a province of the Ottoman empire.

ENGLAND (Geog.) in the Latin Anglia [vide Anglia], the southern and most considerable division of Great Britain.

Geography of England.

Boundaries, Figure, and Extent. England is bounded on the N. by Scotland, N. E. and E. by the German Ocean, S. by the English Channel, and W. by St. George's Channel, the principality of Wales, and the Irish Sea. It is of a triangular form, and from the S. Foreland, in Kent, which may be termed the E. point of the triangle, to Berwick on Tweed, which is the N. its length is 345 m.; from that point to the Land's End in Cornwall, which is the W. it is 425; and the breadth thence to the S. Foreland is 340. Its superficial extent is generally estimated at above fifty thousand of square miles, or upwards of thirty-two millions of statute acres.

Division. It is divided into 40 counties, which, for judicial purposes, are subdivided into six circuits, namely, 1. The Home Circuit, comprehending the counties of Hertford, Essex, Kent, Surrey, and Sussex. 2. The Norfolk Circuit, comprehending Buckingham, Bedford, Huntingdon, Cambridge, Suffolk, and Norfolk. 3. The Oxford Circuit, comprehending Oxford, Berks, Gloucester, Worcester, Monmouth, Hereford, Salop, and Stafford. 4. The Midland, comprehending Warwick, Leicester, Derby, Nottingham, Lincoln, Rutland, and Northampton. 5. The Northern Circuit, comprehending York, Durham, Northumberland, Lancaster, Westmoreland, and Cumberland. 6. The Western Circuit, containing Hants, Wilts, Dorset, Somerset, Devon, and Cornwall. [Vide Britannia]

Principal Towns. [Vide Britannia]

Rivers. The rivers of England are very numerous, the principal of which are the Thames, Severn, Humber, Mersey, Medway, Trent, Ouse, Tyne, Tees, Avon, Eden, and Dee, &c.

ENGLEFIELD (Her.) the name of a very ancient family, which is so called from the town of Englefield, or Englesfield, co. Berks; of which this family is said to have been possessed since the reign of king Egbert, 264 years before the Norman conquest. Haxulfus de Englefield is first mentioned as lord of Englefyld, about the time of Canute, who died in the time of Edward the Confessor. His lineal descendant in the 19th generation was sir Francis Englefield, the first baronet, who was so created in 1612. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Barry of six, gules and argent, on a chief or, a lion passant azure.

Crest. On a wreath, an arm couped at the elbow, vested per pale azure and gules, holding a branch proper. The other crest of the family is a spread-eagle per pale azure and gules; which latter is likewise on the tomb-stones of Englefield church.

ENGLISH, Hester (Biog.) a French woman, who was eminent in the time of Elizabeth and James for fine writing, many specimens of which are extant in private collections, one in particular, in the Harcourt family, entitled 'Historic Memorabiles Genesis per Esteram Ingles Gallam,' Edinburgi, Ann. 1600.

ENGYUM (Geog.) a town of Sicily, now Gangi, was freed from tyranny by Timoleon. Cic. in Ver. l. 3.

ENNA (Geog.) now Castro Junni, a town in the middle of Sicily. Diocl. l. 2; Cic. in Ver. l. 3, c. 49; Mel. l. 2; Strab. l. 5; Ptol. l. 3, &c.

ENNISKILLEN, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Cole, [vide Cole] which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Colc, earl of Enniskillen, viscount Enniskillen, baron Mountflorenee, and baron Grinstead, of Grinstead, co. Wilts, in the peerage of the United Kingdom.

Arms. Argent, a bull passant sable, armed and unguled or, within a border sable bezantee, on a dexter canton azure an harp gold, with strings azure.

Crest. A demi-dragon vert, langued gules, holding in his dexter paw a dart, and in the sinister a shield azure; charged as the canton.

Supporters. Two dragons regardant vert, holding in the exterior paw a dart.

Motto. "Deum cole, regem serva."

ENNISMORE and Listovel, Viscount (Her.) a title enjoyed by the family of Hare, which was conferred in 1816 on William Hare, baron Ennismore.

ENNIUS (Biog.) an ancient poet of Rudii, in Calabria, died, as is said, of the gout, U. C. 585, from excessive drinking.

Horat. l. 2, cp. 21.

Prosiluit dicenda.*

*Ennius ut noster cerinit, qui primus amano
Detulit as Illicone perenni fronde coronam.*

Ovid. Trist. l. 2, v. 424.

Ennius ingenio maximus, arte rudis.

Of his works, comprehending Tragedies, Comedies, and Satires, &c. nothing remains but fragments collected from the quotations of Cicero and other writers, to the number of 990 lines, the best edition of which is that by Hesselius, 4to. Amst. 1707. Cic. de Fin. l. 1, c. 4, &c.; C. Nep. in Cat.; Val. Mar. l. 8, c. 15; Aul. Gell. l. 11; August. de Civ. Dei. l. 2; Macrobi. Sat. l. 6.

ENNODIUS, Magnus Felix (Ecc.) bishop of Padua, in Italy, was born of a consular family in Gaul, about the year 483, and died in 521, after having been appointed to negotiate a union between the Eastern and Western Churches. His works as an author consist of, 1. 'Epistolarum ad Diversos Libri IX.' 2. 'Panegyricus Theodorico Regi Ostragothorum dictus.' 3. 'Libellus Apologeticus pro Synodo Palmarum.' 4. 'Vita B. Epiphanius Episcopi Ticinensis.' 5. 'Eucharisticon de Vita sua ad Elpidium.' 6. 'Parænesis didascalica ad Ambrosium et Beatum.' 7. 'Præceptum de Celularis Episcoporum.' 8. 'Dictiones Sacre,' &c. all of which were published by Andrew Scottus, at Tournay, in 8vo. 1610, and by James Sirmond at Paris, 8vo. 1611; with notes, explaining the names and titles of the persons mentioned by Ennodius. Ennodius' works are likewise printed at the end of father Sirmond's works, Paris, 1696.

ENGIA (Geog.) the ancient Ægina, an island of European Turkey, in a gulf of the same name between Livadia and Morea. The chief town Engia, which contains the ruins of two temples, dedicated formerly to Venus and Jupiter, is situated 24 miles S. S. W. Athens.

ENGIA, Gulf of, an arm of the Archipelago, anciently called Sinus Saronicus, or Salaminiacus.

ENNOMUS (Myth.) a Trojan prince skilled in augury, who was killed by Achilles. Hom. Il. l. 2.

ENOCH, son of Jared, was born A. M. 622, A. C. 3382. He begat Methuselah at the age of 65, and after living 365 years, he was "by faith translated," according to the words of St. Paul. Gen. iv. ; Heb. xi. 5.

ENOCH, son of Midian, and grandson of Abraham and Keturah. Gen. xxv.

ENOCH, the eldest son of Reuben, and founder of a family. Gen. xxvi.

ENON (Bibl.) the place where John baptized, between Shalim and Jordan. John iii.

ENOS (Bibl.) עֵנוֹשׁ, son of Seth, and father of Canaan, was born A. M. 235, A. C. 3769, and died A. M. 1140, A. C. 2864.

ENT, George (Biog.) a physician of Sandwich, in Kent, was born in 1604, and died in 1689. He edited Hervey's 'Exercitationes de Generatione Animalium,' and published 'Animadversiones in Malachia Thruston M. D. Diatribam de Respirationis Usu Primario 1679,' 8vo. besides some contributions to the Philosophical Transactions.

ENTELLUS (Myth.) an athlete, and one of the companions of Æneas, who displayed his skill at the games.

ENTICK (Biog.) or Entinck, John, a miscellaneous writer, who was born in 1713, and died in 1733, is best known by his popular school-books, namely, an English and Latin Dictionary, &c.; besides which he wrote 'Naval History,' fol., 'A History of the Seven Years' War,' 5 vols. 8vo. &c.

ENTINOPE (Hist.) one of the chief founders of Venice, in the fifth century, who having fled from the Goths, concealed himself in the marshes, and built a house there, when it became the resort of other fugitives, who added to the buildings until it rose into a city. His house was converted into a church, dedicated to St. James, and is still standing in the Rialto. Sabell. Decad. l. 1 ; Fclib. Vies des Archit.

ENZINAS, Francis (Biog.) a Spanish writer, known by the different names of Dryander, Du Chesne, and by the Germans, Eyck or Eyckman, was born at Burgos of a distinguished family, in the 16th century, and published in 1545, 'A History of the State of the Low Countries, and of the Religion of Spain,' in Latin, which was afterwards translated into French, and forms a part of the 'Protestant Martyrology,' printed in Germany. His brother John, who had turned Protestant, like himself, was burnt alive at Rome in 1541, for his avowal of his opinions.

EOBANUS, Hessus (Biog.) a Latin poet of Hesse, was born under a tree, as is said, in 1488, and died in 1540, leaving a translation of Theocritus into Latin verse, 8vo. Basil. 1531, and of Homer's Iliad, 8vo. Basil. 1540, &c.; besides 'Eclogæ,' 8vo. Hal. 1539, and 'De tuenda bona Valetudine,' 8vo. Francof. 1564.

EON, de l'Etoile (Ecc.) a gentleman of Lower Brittany, and a fanatic, in the 12th century, who gave himself out for the Son of God, and being imprisoned, died a few days after, leaving many infatuated followers, who chose to be burnt, rather than renounce their folly.

EON (Biog.) vide D'Eon.

EPAMINONDAS (Hist.) Ἐπαμεινώνδας, son of Polymnus, a Theban, descended from the ancient kings of Boeotia, was placed at the head of the Theban armies, and by the victory of Leuctra, released his countrymen from the Spartan yoke. He afterwards fell at the battle of Mantinea, A. C. 363, after hearing that the Boeotians had gained the victory. Xenoph. Hist. Græc. l. 6, 7 ; Polyb. l. 1 ; Diod. l. 15 ; C. Nep. in Vit. ; Cic. ad Fam. l. 5 ; Plut. in Parall.

EPAPHRAS (Bibl.) Ἐπαφρᾶς, a Christian convert, and a fellow-labourer with St. Paul. Col. i. He is supposed to have been the first bishop of Colossus, and his festival is kept on the 19th of July.

This celebrated temple was burnt on the night that Alexander was born, who offered to rebuild it if his name, as the benefactor, were inscribed upon it, which offer the Ephesians are said to have declined, under the adulatory plea that it was improper for one deity to raise a temple to another.

History of Ephesus.

This city was governed by Androchus and his descendants, under the title of kings, until the time of Croesus, by whom it was besieged and taken, and afterwards suffered to enjoy its own laws, until it became successively subject to the Persians, and to Alexander the Great. At his death it fell under the power of the Syrians, and from them it passed into the hands of the Romans. The Ephesians having sided with Mithridates, king of Pontus, and murdered all the Romans that were in the city, were severely punished by Sylla for this revolt; also during the reign of Tiberius they were visited by an earthquake which did much damage, but, otherwise, they enjoyed considerable prosperity until the reign of Alexis Comnenus, when the city was taken by the Mahometans, and, after being retaken by the Greeks in 1206, was finally lost in 1283, from which period it gradually sunk into decay, and is now a miserable Turkish village, called, in the barbarous language of the natives, Ajasuluk. Ecclesiastical History of Ephesus.

The apostle St. John founded the church of Ephesus, and is supposed to have been its first bishop, if we may believe the synodal epistle of Ephesus to the clergy of Constantinople, wherein the bishops of Ephesus, among whom was Polycrates, are called the successors of that apostle. The council of Ephesus, which is the third general council, was assembled in 431, for the purpose of condemning the heresies of Nestorius; several synods had, however, been previously held, particularly one at which St. Chrysostom presided, for regulating the affairs of Asia. *Clem. Virg. Georg. l. 1.

History of Epirus.

This country was at first governed by kings of its own; the first of whom was Neoptolemus, the son of Achilles. From him was descended Pyrrhus, the celebrated opponent to the Romans, whose son, Alexander, was the last king mentioned in history. Epirus soon after became a Roman province, and fell under the power of the Turks in the 14th century. The inhabitants are of the Greek church. A council was held here in 516. Aristot. Hist. Anim. l. 3; Strab. l. 7; Mel. l. 2; Plin. l. 4; Plol. l. 3.

EPISCOPIUS (Biog.) or Bishop Nicholas, a printer of Basle, in the 16th century, who died in 1627, is well known by his edition of the Greek fathers, which has been highly esteemed for its accuracy.

Lond. 1730.

ERROL, Francis, eighth Earl of (Hist.) one of the leaders of the popish party in Scotland, who, entering too warmly into the interests of Spain, was compelled, with the earls of Huntley and Angus, to fly the kingdom. He afterwards obtained permission to return, and died in 1604, leaving a high reputation for nobleness of spirit.

ERROL, William, ninth Earl of, son of the preceding, acted as High Constable at the coronation of Charles I, according to the custom of his ancestors, with whom this office was hereditary, and died in 1636.

ERROL, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Hay [vide Hay]; which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Hay, earl of Errol, lord Hay, hereditary constable of Scotland.

Arms. Argent, three escutcheons gules.

Crest. A falcon proper.

Supporters. Two men in country habits, each holding an ox yoke over his shoulder.

Motto. "Serva jugum."

ERSKINE, Sir William (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was a faithful adherent to king Robert Bruce, and joined the earl of Murray and sir James Douglas in their expedition into England; where, by his many feats of valour there displayed, he procured the honour of knighthood.

ERSKINE, Sir Robert, son and successor of the preceding, trod in the honourable steps of his father, and rendered essential service to king David by his prudence in council, as also by his valour in arms. He was one of the commis-isioners employed to negotiate the redemption of his royal master, who was taken at the battle of Durham in 1346. He died in 1385, after having testified his loyalty and zeal to Robert II, the successor of king David, and made numerous benefactions to the church.

ERSKINE, Sir Thomas, his son, was high in the confidence of Robert III, by whom he was sent on an embassy into England in 1392.

ERSKINE, Robert, Lord of, in imitation of his ancestors signalized himself by his loyalty to James I; for whose redemption, when a prisoner in England, he was sent to treat, and afterwards was one of the hostages who remained for the security of the payment.

ERSKINE, Thomas, Lord of, son of the preceding, notwithstanding he was unsuccessful, as his father had been before him, in his application to the crown for the earldom of Marr, which he claimed in right of Isabel, his grandmother, yet he was true to his sovereign, James III, in his distress, and served him to the end, when the king was miserably killed in the field of Stirling in 1488.

ERSKINE, Alexander, Lord of, son of the preceding, was in great favour with king James IV, having been entrusted with the keeping of his majesty in his youth, and continued to serve him as his Privy-Councillor until his death in 1510.

ERSKINE, John, Lord of, had the tuition of James V entrusted to him, which charge he executed so much to the satisfaction of this prince, that on his coming of age he sent him on an embassy into France in 1534, to propose a match betwixt the king and a daughter of that crown; and afterwards he was sent as ambassador into England. On the death of James V he had the keeping of the young queen Mary committed to him in Stirling Castle, which trust he discharged with no less fidelity, and in 1548 he conducted his royal pupil into France.

ERSKINE, Robert, Master of, eldest son of the preceding, was slain at the battle of Pinkie in 1547.

ERSKINE, Thomas, Master of, second son of John, lord Erskine above-mentioned, was employed in several embassies into England, whereby he gained great reputation.

ERSKINE, John, Lord, Earl of Marr, third son of John, lord Erskine above-mentioned. [Vide Marr]

ERSKINE, Henry, third Lord Cardross, vide Cardross.

ERSKINE, Thomas, Lord, third son of the fifth earl of Buchan, whose distinguished merits as a lawyer are fresh in the recollection of every one, was born in 1749; and, after having served for some time in the Royal Navy, was called to the English bar in 1772. He took his seat as King's Counsel in 1783, was constituted Attorney-General to the Prince of Wales in the same year; appointed Chancellor of the Exchequer to the Prince of Wales in 1802, and Keeper of the Seals of the duchy of Cornwall; constituted Lord High Chancellor of England in 1806, and died in 1823. His lordship likewise distinguished himself as the author of a pamphlet, entitled 'On the Causes and Consequences of the War with France,' which, if it did not add to his lordship's credit as a politician, increased his popularity in no small degree.

ERSKINE, John (Ecc.) baron of Dun, one of the leaders of the Scotch reformation, was born in 1508 or 1509, and died in 1591, after having acted as one of the five superintendants, who in fact took the episcopal authority upon them, under another name. He had a principal hand in compiling the 'Second Book of Discipline,' for the government of the presbyterian church.

ERSKINE (Her.) the name of a noble family, which shines conspicuously in the annals of history, as mentioned above. It is a local surname, derived from the barony of Erskine, in Renfrew, and consequently bespeaks the antiquity of the family, although mention is not made of it earlier than the reign of Alexander II. The earldom of Marr, which had been claimed in 1436 by Robert, lord Erskine, in right of his mother, was confirmed in 1561 to John, third son of John, twelfth lord Erskine, which title became extinct in 1716, on the attainder of John, sixth earl of Marr; but has been restored by his present majesty George IV. The earldom of Buchan came into this family by the marriage of James Erskine, the eldest son of the second marriage of John, second earl of Marr; to which was added the honour and title of lord Cardross, conferred in 1604 on Henry, brother of the said James, earl of Buchan. [Vide Buchan]

ERSKINE, Lord, a title enjoyed by a junior branch of this family, which was conferred in 1806 on Thomas Erskine, the celebrated pleader before-mentioned, who was created lord Erskine, of Restormel Castle, in Cornwall. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Azure, three garbs or.

Crest. On a wreath, a dexter arm couped below the shoulder, grasping a baton or rugged club, both proper.

Supporters. On the dexter side an ostrich, in his mouth a serpent; on the sinister a griffin; the one charged with a mullet under the wing, the other on the shoulder.

Motto. "Trial by jury."

ERSKINE, a younger branch of the above-mentioned family, of the earl of Marr, enjoys the title of earl of Kellie, conferred in 1619 on sir Thomas Erskine of Gogar.

ERSKINE, a branch of the same family, enjoys likewise the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1791 on sir William Erskine, for his long services in the German and American wars.

ERSKINE, Henry (Biog.) a nonconformist minister, and a native of Scotland, was born in 1624, and died in 1696, after having been imprisoned for his nonconformity. He left some MS. treatises in Latin.

ERSKINE, Ebenezer, son of the preceding, took an active part in the schism in Scotland, known by the name of the secession, and died in 1754, leaving four volumes of Sermons.

ERSKINE, Ralph, brother to the preceding, and also a Scotch minister, died in 1752, aged 68, leaving some theological works, which were published in 1764.

ERSKINE, David, Lord Dun, a Scotch lawyer, who died in 1755, at the age of 85, left a work entitled 'Lord Dun's Advices,' 12mo. 1750.

ESSEX Thomas Cromwell, Earl of (Hist.) a statesman of low extraction in the reign of Henry VIII, who, by the favour of Cardinal Wolsey, rose to the post of Secretary of State. The active part which he took in the marriage of Anne of Cleves, dissatisfied the king so much, that he at length fell under his displeasure, and was, after six weeks' imprisonment, executed on Tower-hill in 1540. [Vide Plate VII]

ESSEX, Walter Devereux, first Earl of, son of sir Richard Devereux, was born in 1540; and after having rendered essential service to queen Elizabeth in Ireland, he died in 1576.

ESSEX, Robert, second Earl of, son of the preceding, and the favourite of Elizabeth, was born in 1567; educated at Cambridge; and, after receiving extraordinary favours from his sovereign, he repaid them by insolence and open rebellion, for which he suffered in 1601. He is commonly said to have been the patron of learning and learned men, and, but for his lawless ambition, might have been the ornament of his family, and the age in which he lived. [Vide Plate XIII]

ESSEX, Robert, third Earl of, son of the preceding, after having been restored, on king James's accession, to his father's honours, displayed his ingratitude by joining in the rebellion against his sovereign, Charles I. He was at the head of the rebel troops at the battle of Newbury, and other engagements; but falling afterwards under the suspicion of not being true to his party, he was expelled from parliament in 1645, and died the next year. [Vide Plate XVIII] He is also well known as the first husband of the lady mentioned in the next article.

ESSEX, Frances Howard, Countess of, second daughter of Thomas Howard, first earl of Suffolk, and first wife of Robert Devereux, third earl of Essex, obtained a divorce from him on the ground of impotency, that she might be married to her paramour Robert Carr, earl of Somerset. They were afterwards both tried and condemned for the murder of sir Thomas Overbury; but sentence was not executed upon her, and she died in 1632.

ESSEX, Arthur Capel, first Earl of, and son of the loyal lord Capel, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was sent in 1670 as an ambassador to Christian V, king of Denmark, and after having acquitted himself honourably of that and other charges, he was implicated in the "Fanatic Plot," as it is called, with lord Russell; and being sent prisoner to the Tower in 1683, he was found soon after with his throat cut.

ESSEX, Algernon, second Earl of, and son of the preceding, attended king William to the grand congress at the Hague; and after serving him both in a civil and military capacity, he died in 1709.

ESSEX, William, fourth Earl of, son of the preceding, was appointed Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the king of Sardinia; sworn of the Privy Council in 1737, and died in 1742.

ESSEX, Earl of (Her.) a title which has been enjoyed by several families, namely, of Bouchier, Cromwell, Devereux, and lastly Capel. Henry Bouchier, earl of Ewe, in Normandy, was created in 1461 viscount Bouchier, and earl of Essex, which title became extinct in 1540 at the death of Henry, the second earl. In the same year, Thomas Cromwell, the statesman above-mentioned, was created earl of Essex, which he also forfeited before the year was expired. Walter Devereux, of the Devereux family [vide Devereux], was the next on whom this title was conferred in 1572, which became extinct in 1646. At the Restoration it was revived in the person of Arthur Capel above-mentioned.

[Vide Capel] The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Capel, earl of Essex, viscount Malden, and baron Capel of Hadham.

Arms. Gules a lion rampant between three cross crosslets fitchy or.

Crest. On a wreath a demi-lion rampant couped or, holding in his paws a cross crosslets fitchy or.

Supporters. Two lions or, ducally crowned gules.

Motto. "Fido et fortitudine."

Essex, James (Biog.) an architect of Cambridge, was born in 1723, and died in 1784, leaving, among other works, as an author, 'Remarks on the Antiquity of different Modes of Brick and Stone Buildings in England,' Archæol. vol. iv.; 'Observations on Lincoln Cathedral,' ibid.; besides a paper in vol. vi. on Round Churches, and another on Croyland Abbey, which forms the 22d No. of the Bibliotheca Topog. Britann.

Essex (Geog.) a county of England.

Geography of Essex.

Boundaries and Extent. Essex is bounded on the N. by Cambridgeshire and Suffolk, E. by the German Ocean, S. by Kent, and W. by Hertfordshire and Middlesex. It is about 54 miles long, and 48 broad.

Principal Towns. Colchester, Chelmsford, Saffron-Walden, Malden, Barking, Bocking and Braintree, Epping, Harwich, Ongar, &c.; three of which are boroughs, namely, Colchester, Harwich, and Malden.

Principal Rivers. The Thames, Blackwater, Coln, Chelmer, Stour, Crouch, and Roding.

History of Essex.

The original inhabitants of Essex were the Trinovantes; and, on their expulsion by the Saxons, it formed one of the seven kingdoms of the Heptarchy, namely, of the East Saxons, or Essex, having kings of its own in the following succession:

- ETHEL BALD (Hist.) or Ethelwald, eldest son of Ethelwolf, king of England, succeeded his father in 857, and died after a wicked reign of three years.
- ETHELBERT (Hist.) king of Kent, succeeded his father Emeric in 560, and died after a prudent and happy reign of more than 50 years, in which time he was converted to Christianity by St. Austin. Bed. Hist. l. 1; Gregor. Turon. l. 9, &c.
- ETHELBERT, second son of Ethelwolf, succeeded his elder brother Ethelbald, or Ethelwald, in 860.
- ETHELBERT, the last king of East Anglia, was treacherously murdered by Offa, king of Mercia, in 792.
- ETHELBURGA (Hist.) wife of Edwin, king of Northumberland, through whose influence he was converted to Christianity.
- ETHELFLÉDA (Hist.) sister of king Edward, who was of a masculine character, and assisted her brother in the government of the kingdom.
- ETHELRED (Hist.) brother and successor of king Edward the Martyr, attempted to release himself from the tax called Danegelt by causing all the Danes in England to be murdered in one day, in consequence of which Sweyn, king of Denmark, invaded England. Ethelred retreated to Normandy; but returning to England after the death of Sweyn, he died in 1016, after a reign of 38 years, and was succeeded by Edmund Ironside.
- ETHELWALD (Hist.) vide Ethelbald.
- ETHELWALD, cousin-german to Edward the Elder, rebelled against him on his first accession, but was defeated, and slain in battle.

ETHELWARD (Biog.) or Ethelwerd, grandson of Ethelred, and an English historian, wrote a History of England in four books, which was edited with William of Malmesbury, Roger, Hoveden, and some others, by sir Henry Saville, under the title of 'Rerum Anglicarum Scriptores post Bedam,' &c. Lond. 1595, Francof. 1601.

ETHELWOLF (Hist.) the son of Egbert, and father of Alfred the Great, succeeded his father in 837, and died in 858. He was the first who paid the tribute to the pope, which was known by the name of Peter's pence. Asser. in Vit. Aelf. Chron. Sar.

ETHELWOLF (Ecc.) or Ethelwolde, bishop of Winchester in the 10th century, was the author of different works; namely, 'De Planetis et Mundi Climatibus,' &c.

ETHERED (Hist.) the third son of Ethelwolf, king of England, succeeded his brother Ethelbert in 866, and died, in the sixth year of his reign, of the wounds he had received in battle with the Danes, who harassed the country, particularly at this period. He was succeeded by Alfred the Great.

ETHEREGE, Sir George, (Biog.) a dramatic writer, descended of an ancient family in Oxfordshire, was born about 1636, and died in 1688. Among his dramatic pieces, his 'Man of Mode, or Sir Fopling Flutter,' has been reckoned his master-piece; besides which he wrote in prose 'An Account of the Rejoicing at the Diet of Ratisbon, performed by Sir George Etherege residing there from his Majesty of Great Britain, upon Occasion of the Birth of the Prince of Wales,' printed in the Savoy, 1683.

ETHERINGTON (Hist.) the name of an ancient family of Kingston-upon-Hull, co. York, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1775 on sir Henry Etherington; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:
Arms. Per pale argent and sable, three lions rampant, countercharged two and one.

Crest. A tower, decayed on the sinister side, argent, on the battlement or, a leopard's face proper.

ETHFIN (Hist.) son of Eugene VII, succeeded his nephew Murdac on the Scottish throne about 730, and died after a reign of 30 years, at the close of which the peace of the kingdom was disturbed by some of the factious nobles, to whom he entrusted his power. His effigy is given as in the annexed figure.

ETHIOPIA (Geog.) vide Aethiopia.

ETHODIUS (Hist.) the name of two kings of Scotland, who are said to have reigned as early as the second century.

ETHRYGE, Sir George (Biog.) or Etheridge, George, in Latin Edrycus, probably an ancestor of the preceding Etherege, was born at Thame, in Oxfordshire, and admitted of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, in 1534; made the king's professor of Greek in 1553; dismissed from that post on the accession of Elizabeth, on account of his attachment to popery; and was living in 1588, but the time of his death is not known. He wrote verses both in Greek and Hebrew. One piece of his he presented to queen Elizabeth in 1566, when she visited Oxford, entitled, 'Acta Henrici Octavi Carmine Græco;' besides which he turned the Psalms into Hebrew verse, and published in 1588, 'Hyponimemata quædam in aliquot Libros Pauli Æginetæ, seu Observationes Medicamentorum qui hac Ætate in Usu sunt.'

ETIENNE (Biog.) vide Stephens.

ETRUSCUS, Cl. (Hist.) a man of mean condition, who was raised by Vespasian to the equestrian rank, and banished by Domitian. At his death Statius commemorates the sorrows of his son, who had accompanied him in his exile, under the title of 'Iacrymæ Etrusci.' Mart. l. 7.

ETTMULLER, Michael (Biog.) a physician of Leipsig, was born in 1644, and died in 1683, leaving, 1. 'Synopsis Collegii Institutionum Medicarum.' 2. 'Institutiones Medicæ.'

3. 'Chymia rationalis et experimentalis curiosa,' Lugd. Bat. 4to. 1684; besides other pieces, some of which were published together in 1708 at Franckfort-on-the-Maine. His son, Michael Ernest Ettnuller, besides publishing his father's works, wrote various dissertations on medical subjects, and contributed various papers to the 'Acta Eruditorum,' and the collections of the 'Naturæ Curiosorum.'

ETNA (Geog.) vide Ætna.

EVADNE (Myth.) 'Εὐάδην, a daughter of Iphis, or Iphocles, of Argos, who, when her husband, Capaneus, was struck with thunder by Jupiter for his impiety, threw herself on his burning pile, and perished in the flames.

EVAGORAS (Hist.) 'Εὐαγόρας, a king of Cyprus, who retook Salamis, which had been taken from his father by the Persians. He died A. C. 374, after having been rendered tributary to Artaxerxes. Cæsar. Nep. l. 12; Diodor. l. 14; Paus. l. 1; Justin. l. 5.

EVAGORAS, grand-son of the preceding, being deprived of his possessions by his uncle Protogoras, fled to Artaxerxes Ochus, by whose order he was put to death.

EVAGORAS (Numis.) medals of the first king of this name are extant, bearing his effigy, as in the annexed figure: inscription on the obverse, ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ΕΥΑΓΟΡΟΥ ΚΥΠΡΙΩΝ ΔΙ; i. e. Regis Evagoræ Cyprionum Anno 14.

EVAGORAS (Biog.) an historian of Lindos, in the reign of Augustus, who wrote a history of Egypt, and other things.

EVAGRIUS (Ecc.) a patriarch of Constantinople, was elected in 370, after the death of Eudoxus, and banished by the emperor Valentinian, who favoured the Arian heresy. S. Gregor. Nazian. Oral. ad Cl. Episc. ; Socrat. Hist. Eccles. l. 6.

EVAGRIUS, patriarch of Antioch in the fourth century, opposed Flavianus, his rival, in the patriarchate, in which he was supported by pope Siricius; but this schism, which took its rise from Paulinus, terminated at the death of Evagrius. St. Jerome, who was the friend of this Evagrius, speaks favourably of his writings. S. Hieron. de Script. Eccles. ; S. Ambros. Epist. 78; Sozom. Hist. Eccles. ; Theodoret. l. 5; Baron. Annal. ann. 372.

EVAGRIUS (Biog.) a monk of Pontus, in the fourth century, who was skilled in disputing against the heretics. He wrote, among other things, 'Monachus, sive de Vita activa;' 'Gnosticus sive de iis qui Cognitionis Munere donati sunt;' 'Antirrheticus adversus tentantes Demones.' Socrat. Hist. Eccles. l. 4; Sozom. l. 6; Baron. Annal. ann. 388.

EVAGRIUS, an ecclesiastical historian, surnamed Scholasticus, was born at Epiphania in 536, in the reign of Justinian, and is well known as the author of an Ecclesiastical History in six books, which commences where Socrates and Theodoretus end; that is to say, about the year 431; he likewise published a volume, containing relations, epistles, &c. The original Greek was published by Stephens, but the best edition of this work is that by Reading, with Socrates, Sozomenes, &c. 3 vols. fol. Cantab. 1720.

EVAN (Myth.) a surname of Bacchus. Virg. Æn. l. 6; Ovid. Met. l. 4.

EVANDER (Myth.) a son of Mercury by the prophetic Carmentis, and king of Arcadia, who, being obliged to leave his country on account of an accidental murder, is said to have repaired to Italy, where he took up his residence, and laid the foundation of the future Rome. He gave Æneas assistance against the Rutuli.

Ovid. Fast. l. 5.

EVANGRIDES (Biog.) a writer of Elis, who gave an account of all who obtained the prize at Olympia.

EVANS (Her.) the name of a family which enjoys the dignity of the peerage, under the title of baron Carbery, co. Cork, which was conferred in 1715 on George Evans. This family has since added the name of Freke to that of Evans.

EVANS, Arise (Biog.) or Rice, a Welch conjuror, who, after having officiated as a clergyman, laid aside his profession and applied himself to the practice of the black art, in which he gained such reputation that he was consulted by lord Bothwell, and sir Kenelm Digby.

EVANS, Abel, the epigrammatist, whose repartees were long remembered and repeated at Oxford, was of St. John's College, where he took his degree of M. A. in 1699, B. D. in 1705, D. D. in 1711. A good specimen of his poetry may be seen in Nichol's 'Select Collection,' particularly 'The Apparition,' &c.

EVANS, Evans, a Welch divine and poet of Cardiganshire, was born in 1730, and died in 1790. He published, 1. 'Dissertatio de Bardis,' 4to. 1764. 2. 'The Love of our Country, with Historical Notes,' 4to. 1772. 3. Several Welch compositions, printed in the Diddanweh Tenluaid; besides two volumes of Tillotson's Sermons translated into Welch.

EVANSON, Edward (Biog.) was born at Warrington in 1731, educated at Cambridge, and, after having taken orders and officiated as a clergyman, he became gradually sceptical in his opinions, as to render it necessary for him to resign his livings. He wrote, among other things which were particularly hostile to revelation, a work entitled, 'The Dissonance of the four generally received Evangelists, and the Evidence of their Authenticity examined;' which was thought to demand, and, consequently, received an ample confutation from several able pens, particularly that of the Rev. T. Falconer, in his Bampton Lectures, published in 1811.

EVAX (Hist.) an Arabian prince of great learning, who wrote a book, 'De Simplicium Effectibus;' which he dedicated to Nero, according to Pliny, although Salmasius and Hardouin declare that some MSS. of that author do not contain the passage. Plin. l. 25.

EUBATAS (Biog.) an athlete of Cyrene, who resisted the seductions of the courtesan Lais, on which account his wife erected a statue in honour of him. Ælian. Var. Hist. l. 10; Paus. in Eliac. l.

EUBCEA (Geog.) Ευβοία, anciently called Macris, Oche, Ellopiæ, Chalcis, Abantis, and Asopis, one of the largest islands in the Ægean Sea, next in size to Crete, now Negropont. It is of an oblong figure, separated from the continent of Bœotia by the narrow straits of the Euripus. The principal town was Chalcis, and the chief harbour Geræstus. Its promontory, Caphareus, with the adjacent rocks, were noted for being dangerous to navigators.

Strab. l. 10; Plin. 2; Tertullian de Anim. c. 52.

EUBCEA (Numis.) several medals are extant of this island, bearing most frequently the type of an ox's head, as in the annexed figure. A head of Apollo, or Arcthusa, is also to be found upon the reverse of these medals: the inscriptions, EY. EYBO. EYBOIEΩN. Golz. Græc. Insul.; Beg. Thes. Brand. T. I; Pembroke. Mus. V. 11; Hunt. Num. Pop. and Urle. &c.

EUBULÆ (Hist.) an Athenian virgin, daughter of Leon, was sacrificed with her sisters, by order of the oracle at Delphi, for the safety of her country, which laboured under a famine. Ælian. Var. Hist. l. 12.

EUBULIDES (Biog.) a philosopher of Miletus, pupil and successor to Euclid, who attempted to gain reputation by opposing Aristotle. Diog. in Vit. Euclid.

EUBULUS (Biog.) Ευβούλος, an Athenian orator, rival to Demosthenes. Demosth. Orat. in Mid. &c.

EUBULUS, an Athenian, who wrote plays, which are mentioned by Athenæus and Suidas.

EURULUS, an historian, who wrote an account of Mystras. Porphy. in Nymph. Antr.

EUCERUS (Hist.) an Alexandrian, accused of adultery with Octavia, that Nero might have occasion to divorce her.

EUCHENOR (Myth.) Ευχένωρ, son of Polyidus, who accompanied the Greeks to Troy, where he was slain. Hom. Il. l. 13.

EUCHERIUS, S. (Ecc.) bishop of Lyons, of a rich and noble family, was drawn from his solitude in the island of Lerino, whither he had retired, in order to take upon him the charge of the church of Lyons in 434. He assisted at the first council of Orange in 441, and died in 454. He wrote several pieces in favour of an ascetic life, which are lost. S. Hilar. Pang.; Marcellin. Chron.; Claudian. Mamert. l. 4; Gennad. de Script. Eccles. &c.

EUCHERIUS, S. bishop of Orleans, who died in 743, had been taken from Jumieges in 714 to govern the church of Orleans, but, having fallen under the displeasure of Charles Martel, he was exiled to Cologne.

EUCLIDES (Biog.) Ευκλείδης, Euclid, a native of Megara, and disciple of Socrates, A. C. 404; who, as the Megarians were forbidden to enter the city of Athens, assumed the disguise of a woman, that he might attend that philosopher. Aul. Gell. l. 6, c. 10; Diog. in Socrat.

EUCLIDES, the illustrious mathematician of Alexandria, who flourished A. C. 300, and, according to Pappus and Proclus, taught mathematics in Egypt, in the reign of Ptolemy Lagos. He first reduced arithmetic and geometry into the form of a science, by collecting and digesting into a regular order, all the fundamental principles of pure mathematics, which had been delivered down by Thales, Pythagoras, Eudoxus, and other mathematicians before him; to which he added others of his own. His works, as we learn from Pappus and Proclus, consisted of the Elements of Geometry, Data, Introduction to Harmony, Phenomena, Optics, Catoptrics, a Treatise of the Division of Superficies, Porisms, Loci ad Superficiem, Fallacies, and four books of Conics. A collection of such of his works as are extant, was edited by Dr. David Gregory, fol. Oxon, 1703; and the most celebrated of these, namely, the Elements, which was first published in 1533, at Basil, has since gone through numberless editions, in all languages. His 'Introduction to Harmonics,' which in some MSS. was attributed to Cleonidas, first appeared in print with a Latin version, at Venice, in 1498, under the title of 'Cleonidæ Harmonicum Introductorium,' but Meibomius accounts for this mistake by supposing Cleonidas, who is altogether unknown as a writer, to have been a transcriber from the MSS. of Euclid. His 'Section of the Canon,' went through the same number of editions as the preceding. [Vide Plate XXXIV]

EUD

EUCRATIS (Hist.) a king of Bactria, was killed by his son, of the same name, who was soon after killed in battle.

EUDÆMON, John Andrew (Biog.) a Jesuit, and native of Crete, who died in 1625, was suspected to be the author of a work entitled 'Admonitio ad Regem Ludovicum XIII,' which attacked the authority of the kings of France, in matters of an ecclesiastical nature. He is, however, principally known as the advocate of the Romish church against the English divines. Prideaux, Abbot, Collins, &c.

EUDAMIDAS (Hist.) a Lacedæmonian, and brother of Phœbidas, was chosen to be their general in the war against the Olynthians, in the 99th Olympiad, A.C. 382.

EUDAMIDAS, son of Archidamus IV, succeeded his brother Agis IV, A.C. 330.

EUDAMIDAS, son of Archidamus, succeeded to the throne of Sparta, A.C. 268. Plut. in Ag.

EUDEMUS (Biog.) a philosopher of Cyprus, said to be intimate with Aristotle. Cic. Div. l. 1, c. 25.

EUDEMUS, an orator of Megalopolis, præceptor to Philopœmen. Plut. Philop.

EUDEMUS, the physician of Livia, the wife of Drusus, &c.

EUDES (Hist.) or Eudo, hereditary prince of Aquitania and Gascony, succeeded his father Baggis, and died in 735, after having been engaged successfully against the Saracens.

EUDES, a count of Paris, and duke of France, son of Robert I, surnamed the Bold, was proclaimed king of Western France in 888, and died in 898, leaving the reputation of being one of the most valiant warriors of his time. His effigy is given, as in the annexed figure.

EUDES, or Henry, surnamed the Great, duke of Burgundy, son of Hugh the abbot, and brother of Hugh Capet, died in 1001.

EUDES I, duke of Burgundy, succeeded his brother Hugh in 1078, and died in 1103.

EUDES II, son of Hugh II, died duke of Burgundy in 1162.

EUDES III, succeeded his father Hugh III in 1192, and being a valiant and pious prince, engaged in the crusades, where he distinguished himself, and died in 1218.

EUDES, John (Ecc.) founder of a congregation of priests denominated Eudists, after him, and brother of the historian Mezeray, was born in 1601, and died in 1680, leaving several devotional works.

EUDOCIA (Hist.) a daughter of the sophist Leontius, was born at Athens A.C. 400, and married to Theodosius the Younger, but being suspected of infidelity, she was separated from him, and died in 458. She wrote several things both in prose and verse, mentioned by Socrates and Photius.

EUDOCIA (Numis.) medals are extant bearing the effigy of this empress, as in the annexed figure; inscription, ÆLIA EUDOCIA AUG.; on the reverse, GLORIA ROMANORUM.—SALUS REIPUBLICÆ, &c.; within a crown of laurel, in which there is a cross with a star. Du Carig. Famil. Byz. Mediol. Numis. Imperat.

EUDOXIA, Ælia (Hist.) wife of the emperor Arcadius, died in child-birth in 404, after having caused the banishment of St. John Chrysostom. Theophanes, Cedrenus, Eunapius, Zonaras, Glicas, Baronius, &c.

EUDOXIA, another name for Eudocia, wife of Theodosius, jun.

EUDOXIA, Licinia, daughter of Theodosius, by Eudocia, married the emperor Valentinian III in 437, and after his death was compelled to marry Maximus, the murderer of her husband, but having called Genseric, king of the Vandals, to her aid, he pillaged Rome for 14 days, and afterwards carried away this princess, with her two daughters, into Africa. Socrates, Evagrius, Theophanes, Prosper Idatius, Marcellinus, Cassiodorus, Procopius, Baronius, &c.

EUDOXIA, daughter of the emperor Valentinian III and the preceding Eudoxia, was at first married to Palladius, by order of the usurper Maximus, but being taken by Genseric, king of the Vandals, into Africa, she was married to his son Hunneric, whom she afterwards left, and retiring to Jerusalem died there. Nicéphor. l. 15.

EUDOXIA, wife of the emperor Constantine Ducas, was entrusted by him with the guardianship of her children, and the government of the kingdom during their minority. She afterwards married Romanus IV, but her son Michael having obtained the empire, placed his mother in a monastery. Zonar. Annal.

EUDOXIA, the wife of Constantine Copronymus, and also of Heraclius.

EUDOXIA (Numis.) medals are extant bearing the effigies of Eudoxia Ælia, and Eudoxia Licinia, as in the annexed figures; inscriptions, ÆL EUDOXIA. P. F. AUG.; and LICINIA EUDOXIA P. F. AUG.

EUDOXUS (Ecc.) an Arian in the fourth century, son of St. Cæsar the Martyr, usurped the see of Antioch in 358, was made patriarch of Constantinople by the emperor Valens in 360, and died 10 years after, having persecuted the church with an implacable fury. Socrat. Hist. Eccles. l. 2; Nicéph. l. 8; Baron. Annal. ann. 311.

EUDOXUS (Biog.) a son of Æschines, of Cnidus, who studied under Plato, and died in his 53d year, A.C. 352, was the first who regulated the year among the Greeks. He wrote many works which are all lost. Cic. de Div. l. 2; Strab. l. 2; Lucan. l. 10; Diog. Laert. in Vit.; Voss. de Hist. Græc.

EUDOXUS, a native of Cyzicus, who sailed round the coast of Africa from the Red Sea, and entered the Mediterranean by the columns of Hercules. Plin. l. 2.

EVE (Hibl.) חַוָּה, the name of the first woman, which signifies life, and was given to her because she was to be the mother of all living. Gen. i. ii.

EVEILLON, John (Biog.) canon and grand vicar of Angers, was born in 1572, and died in 1651, leaving among his works, 1. 'Des Excommunications et des Monetoires,' &c. 4to. 1672. 2. 'De Processionibus Ecclesiasticis,' &c. 8vo. &c.

EVELYN (Her.) the name of a family which originally flourished at Evelyn, in the county of Salop. George Evelyn, esq. the founder of the branch of the Evelyns, of Wotton, in Surrey, first carried the art of making gunpowder to perfection, in England, in the time of queen Elizabeth. Two of his descendants were created baronets, namely, John in 1660, and Edward in 1682, but for want of male issue, both those titles became extinct. Of this family also, was John Evelyn, esq. the subject of the following article, whose grandson was created a baronet in 1705. Their arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Azure, a griffin passant and in chief or.

Crest. A griffin passant or, beak and forelegs azure, ducally gorged of the l. c.

EVELYN, John (Biog.) of the ancient and honourable family mentioned under Heraldry, was born in 1620, admitted fellow commoner of Balliol College, Oxford, in 1637, entered the Middle Temple in 1640, began his travels in 1642, and after spending the remainder of his life in an interchange of business and study, he died in a good old age in 1705. [Vide Plate XXXVII] His labours as a public man, though highly honourable to his loyalty and humanity in an age when those virtues were not much in request, have rendered him less known than his literary works, of which the following is a list, 1. 'Of Liberty and Servitude,' 12mo. 1649, a tract which was offensive to the usurping powers. 2. 'A Character of England, as it was lately presented in a Letter to a Nobleman of France, with Reflections upon Gallus Castratus,' 16to. 1651, the third edition in 1659. 3. 'The State of France,' 8vo. London, 1652. 4. 'An Essay on the First Book of Titus Lucretius Carus de Rerum Natura, interpreted and made into English Verse, by J. Evelyn, esq.' Lond. 8vo. 1656. 5. 'The French Gardener, instructing how to cultivate all Sorts of Fruit Trees and Herbs for the Garden,' &c. 12mo. 'Monsieur de la Quintinyes' Treatise of Orange Trees,' &c. London, 1653. 25. 'Numismata, a Discourse of Medals,' &c. fol. Lond. 1697. His Diary and Correspondence were published in 2 vols. 4to. in 1821.

EVELYN, John, third son of the preceding, was born in 1654, partly educated at Oxford, and died in 1698. He wrote, 1. 'A Greek Poem, prefixed to the Second Edition of the Sylva.' 2. 'Of Gardens, Four Books first written in Latin Verse by Renatus Rapinus, and now made English by John Evelyn, Esq.' 8vo. 1673. 3. 'The Life of Alexander the Great, translated from Plutarch, and inserted among Plutarch's Lives.' 4. 'The History of the Grand Viziers Mahomet and Achmet Coprogli,' &c. translated from the French, 8vo. Lond. 1677; besides occasional poems, printed in Dryden's Miscellany.

EVERMERUS (Biog.) an ancient historian of Messenia, who was intimate with Cassander. He travelled over Greece and Arabia, and wrote a history of the gods, which Ennius translated into Latin. It is now lost, but was extant in the time of Athenæus. Cic. de Nat. Deor. l. 1; Varr. de Re Rust. l. 1; Lactant. de Fal. Relig. c. 11.

EVENUS (Myth.) a son of Jason and Hypsipyle, who fought on the side of the Greeks in the Trojan war.

EVENUS (Biog.) an elegiac poet of Paros, preceptor to the historian Philistus, of Syracuse. Joss. Hist. Græc.

EVENUS (Geog.) a river running through Ætolia.

EVEPHENUS (Biog.) a Pythagorean philosopher, of whom, with his friend Eucritus, a similar story is told as of Damon and Pythias. Polyan. l. 7.

EVERARD (Her.) the name of a family in Essex, of which mention is made as early as Henry III. Richard Everard, a descendant of this family, was created a baronet in 1628; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Argent, a fesse wavy, between three estoils gules.

Crest. On a wreath a bust of a man in profile, habited in a long cap checky.

EVERARD, Nicholas Grudius (Biog.) a lawyer, and native of Walcheren, was born in 1462, and died in 1532. His works were, 1. 'Topica Juris, sive Loca Argumentorum Legales,' fol. Lovan. 1516, Lugd. 1568, 1579, and Francof. 1591; afterwards abridged by Abraham Marconet, Magdeburg, 12mo. 1655. 2. 'Consilia sive Responsa Juris,' Lovan. fol. 1554, Antv. 1577, 1643, &c.

EVERARD, John, commonly known by the name of Johannes Secundus, son of the preceding, who died in 1536, at the age of 25, was the author of some Latin Poems, which have rendered him eminent as a poet, although not as a moralist. His works have gone through several editions, of which the most copious is that of Scriverius, Lugd. Bat. 1631. His 'Basia' were translated into English, with the omission of such as were unfit for perusal.

EVERARD, Nicholas Grudius, brother of the preceding, who died in 1571, was the author of some poems, entitled,

1. 'Epigrammata Arcuum Triumphalium,' &c. Lovan. 1540.

- EUPOLIS (Biog.) a comic poet of Athens, who flourished 435 years before the Christian era, seven of whose compositions were rewarded with the prize in the public theatres of Athens. Of his works nothing but fragments now remain. Cic. ad Attic. l. 6; Horat. l. 1; Aul. Gell. l. 1; Quintil. l. 10.
- EVREMOND, Charles de, St. (Hist.) a marechal de camp in the French army, where he distinguished himself by his valour, was born at St. Denis le Guast, in Lower Normandy, in 1613, and died in England in 1703, whither he had retired to escape the displeasure of the French court. His works, by which he is mostly known in this country, consist of essays and letters, &c. which have passed through several editions of different sizes; one edition is in 2 vols. 4to. and another 7 vols. 12mo. An English translation of some of his works was published in 2 vols. 8vo. 1700; and a translation of some other of his pieces in 1 vol. 8vo. under the title of the 'Posthumous Works of M. de St. Evremond,' &c.; another translation, in 2 vols. 8vo. was published in 1714; and in 3 vols. 8vo. 1728.
- EVREUX (Geog.) a town of Upper Normandy, capital of the modern department of the Eure, situated in a beautiful country watered by the Iton, 25 m. S. Rouen, 65 W. by N. Paris.

History of Evreux.

This town, which was known to the Romans by the names of Ebroicum, Civitas Ebroicorum, or Ebrovicorum, Mediolanum Aulercorum, Eburonicum, &c. became a principality, and had counts of its own, among whom was Louis of France, eldest son of Philip III, from whom sprung the kings of Navarre. Devreux, the family name of the earls of Essex, and the present viscount Hereford, is said to be derived from this place. It is a bishop's see, which was probably erected by S. Sixtus about 260, when he sent S. Taurinus into Gaul, and placed him over this church.

EURIC (Hist.) son of Theodoric I, king of the Goths in Spain, and father of Alaric, succeeded his brother, Theodoric II, whom he is said to have put to death in 466, and died in 484, or 485, after a warlike and successful reign, in which he ravaged Portugal and Navarre. His effigy is given as in the annexed figure.

EURIPIDES (Biog.) Ἐϋριπίδης, one of the celebrated tragic poets of the Greeks, the cotemporary and rival of Sophocles, whose mutual jealousies were the subject of ridicule for the comic muse of Aristophanes. He drew upon himself so much ill-will from the severity of his pen and his manners, that he was obliged to leave his native place, Athens, and retired to the court of Archelaus, king of Macedonia, by whom he was received in the most flattering manner. But here he met with an untimely and deplorable end from the dogs of Archelaus, who, meeting him in his solitary walks, tore him to pieces. [Vide Plate XXX] Euripides wrote 75 tragedies, of which only 19 are extant; namely, the Phenissæ, Orestes, Medea, Andromache, Electra, Hippolytus, Iphigenia in Aulis, Iphigenia in Tauris, Hercules, Troades, Hecuba, Alcestis, Supplices, Rhesus, Bacchæ, Cyclops, Heraclida, Helena, and Ion, together with a fragment of Danae. The best editions of these collectively are, that of Joshua Barnes, fol. Cantab. 1694; that of Musgrave, 4 vols. 4to. 1778; and that of Beck, 3 vols. 4to. 1778, 1788, which has been formed from the two preceding. The earliest edition of any part of Euripides was printed at Florence about the end of the 15th century, in 4to. containing the Medea, Hippolytus, Alcestis, and Andromache; this was followed by the princeps, or Aldine edition, containing 18 tragedies, but not taken from good MSS.; since that period this great poet has, separately and collectively, passed through innumerable editions. Diod. l. 13; Cic. de Invent. l. 1, &c.; Aul. Gell. l. 15; Quintil. l. 10; Athen. l. 13.

EURIPUS (Geog.) a narrow strait, now called the Straits of Negropont, which separated the island of Eubœa from the coast of Bœotia, and was remarkable for the flux and reflux of its waters, as also for their perturbed state afterwards.

The fruit of this amour was Minos, Sarpedon, and Rhadamanthus. She was afterwards reckoned as the goddess of Sidon. Hesiod. Theogn. v. 356; Apollod. l. 2.

EUROPA (Numis.) this nymph is commonly represented as in the annexed figure of a female sitting on a bull, and stretching a veil over her head, according to the above-mentioned fable. She is so represented on medals of Amphipolis, Calaguris, Crete, Sidon, and Syracuse, &c. Vaillant. Num. Gr. et Col. &c.; Beg. Thes.

EUROPA (Geog.) Europe, one of the three grand divisions of the habitable globe known to the ancients, which was supposed to receive its name from Europa, who was carried there by Jupiter. The Mediterranean divided it from Africa on the South; on the West and North it was washed by the Atlantic and Northern Oceans; and on the East it was bounded by the Ægean Sea, Hellespont, Euxine, Palus Mæotis, and the Tanais in a northern direction.

EUSEBIUS, St. (Ecc.) a pope said to be the son of a physician, succeeded S. Marcellus in 310, and died after governing the church four years. Tillem. Mem.; Du Pin, Biblioth.

EUSEBIUS, bishop of Cæsarea, in Palestine, and the celebrated historian of the Christian church, who took the surname of Pamphilus, from his friendship with Pamphilus the Martyr, was born in Palestine in 267, elected to the see of Cæsarea in 313 or 315, and died about 338; although he served the cause of Christianity by his writings, yet the soundness of his faith has been called in question more than once, and not without reason. His works are, 1. 'Chronicon,' in two parts, carried down to A. D. 325. The first part, containing the early periods of history, is very mutilated. The second part, called the 'Canon Chronicus,' digests the history of the several nations according to the order of time. Both parts were translated into Latin by St. Jerome; but of the version of the first part only extracts are preserved printed with the translation of the second part, first at Basil, and afterwards more accurately at Bourdeaux, by Arnauld de Pontac, in 1604. The work complete, as far as it is extant, containing all the fragments of the Greek, as also the Latin version, has since been published by Joseph Scaliger, under the title of 'Thesaurus Temporum,' &c. fol. Lugd. Bat. 1606. An enlarged edition by Morus, 2 vols. fol. Amst. 1658.

2. 'Preparationis Evangelicæ Libri XV.' 3. 'De Demonstratione Evangelicâ,' of which only ten books are extant, although he wrote twenty. This and the former work were printed by Robert Stephens, Gr. 2 vols. fol. 1544 and 1545; reprinted with Vigerus' translation of the book 'De Preparatione,' and Donatus' translation of the work 'De Demonstratione,' in 2 vols. fol. Paris, 1628. 4. 'Historia Ecclesiasticæ Libri V,' containing the history of the Christian church from the beginning to the death of Licinius the Elder, which includes a period of 324 years. This history has been often translated and reprinted; but the best edition is that of Valesius, who, besides revising the Greek text, and giving a new version, has also enriched it with learned notes. This edition was printed at Paris in 1659 and 1671, at Francfort in 1672, with the rest of the Ecclesiastical Historians; but the reprint of this edition most esteemed in our country is that by Reading, 3 vols. fol. Gr. and Lat. Cantab. 1720, where, to the notes of Valesius, have been added others of more modern writers. 5. 'Contra Hieroclem Liber,' in reply to a book of this Hierocles, wherein he had compared our Saviour to Apollonius Tyaneus, a sorcerer. This piece is printed at the end of the work 'De Demonstratione Evangelicâ,' and at the end of Philostriatus 'De Vitâ Apollonii.' 6. 'Contra Marcellum Libri II,' and 'De Ecclesiasticâ Theologiâ Libri III,' the object of these two works is to confute Marcellus, bishop of Ancyra, who was condemned for Sabellianism in the synod at Constantinople in 336. It was written at the desire of that synod, and is also subjoined to the book 'De Demonstratione.' 7. 'Epistola ad Cæsarienses de Fide Nicæna,' preserved by Socrates and Theodoretus in their Ecclesiastical Histories. 8. 'De Locis Hebraicis,' translated into Latin, and also enlarged by St. Jerom, published together with notes by Bonfrerius, Paris, 1631 and 1659. 9. 'Oratio de Laudibus Constantini,' printed at the end of the Ecclesiastical History. 10. 'De Vitâ Constantini Libri IV,' also subjoined to the Ecclesiastical History. 11. 'Expositio in Canticum Canticorum,' this was not written entirely by Eusebius, but compiled from his writings, and those of Athanasius, Didymus, St. Gregory of Nyssen, and others; published in Gr. with Polychronius and Psellus, by Meursius, 4to. Lugd. Bat. 1617. 12. 'Vitæ Prophetarum,' ascribed to Eusebius in an ancient MS., and published by Curterius, with the Commentaries of Procopius on Isaiah, Gr. and Lat. fol. Paris, 1580. 13. 'Canones Sacrorum Evangeliorum X,' translated by St. Jerome, and inserted, with his other works, in the 'Bibliotheca Patrum.' 14. 'Apologie pro Origine Liber Primus,' translated by Rufinus, and published in the works of St. Jerom, by whom we are informed that Eusebius was the sole author of the 'Six Books of the Apology for Origen.' The Latin translation of the first book is all that remains of this work. 15. Two Sermons published in Gr. and Lat. by Combefisius. Besides these works of Eusebius, there are said to be several extant in MS. not yet published, and the titles of many which are not extant, particularly one against Porphyry. S. Hieron. Cat. &c.; Baron. Annal.; Scalig. Thes. Tempor.; Cave, Hist. Lit. vol. i.; Tillemont. Mem.; Montfaucon. Pref. Comment. Euseb.; Du Pin, Bibliothecæ, &c.

EUSEBIUS, bishop of Berytus, and a favourer of the Arian heresy, persecuted St. Athanasius, and usurped the see of Constantinople, after procuring the banishment of Paul, the legal bishop. He died in 342.

EUSEBIUS, bishop of Emesus, was elected to that see in 341, but being obliged to resign it on account of a popular sedition, he died in 359. He wrote many works, which are not now extant, but of which St. Jerome gives some account. Socrat. 1. 2; Sozom. 1. 3; S. Hieron. Cat.; Baron. Annal. ann. 341.

EUSEBIUS, bishop of Verceil, in the 4th century, was very

- zealous in defence of Athanasius, and the orthodox faith, for which he suffered much at the hands of the emperor Constantius. He died about 373.
- EUSEBIUS, bishop of Samosata, was killed in 378, by a tile thrown on his head by an Arian woman, on account of the zeal with which he had opposed this heresy. S. Gregor. Nazian. ep. 28; H. Theodoret. l. 1; Herm. in Vit. S. Basil.; Baron. Annal. ann. 360.
- EUSEBIUS, bishop of Bologna, in Italy, the friend of St. Ambrose, assisted at the council of Aquileia in 381. He is supposed to have governed this see from 370 to 400.
- EUSEBIUS, bishop of Milan from 449 to 464, addressed a letter in his own name, and that of 18 other bishops, to pope Leo, which is inserted in the works of this latter.
- EUSEBIUS, a Syrian merchant, procured, by means of presents and intrigues, his election to the see of Paris in 595, which he did not hold with any credit to himself, or benefit to the church. Greg. Tur.; Montfaucon. Monum. de la Monarch. Franc. &c.
- EUSEBIUS, succeeded Etherius as bishop of Antibes in 541, and died in 571, after having assisted at the fourth council of Orleans, and also at the council of Arles.
- EUSTACHIUS, Bartholomew (Biog.) an anatomist of San Severino, who died in 1574, was the author of several works which are lost; among which was his treatise 'De Controversiis Anatomicorum.' His smaller works which remain, appeared under the title of 'Opuscula Anatomica,' &c. Venet. 1563 and 1674, also Lugd. Bat. 1707, under the superintendence of Boerhaave. A series of engravings mentioned in his 'Opuscula,' was discovered in 1714, when they were published at Rome in folio by Lancisi, physician to Clement XI, and again at Geneva in 1717, but the edition published at Rome in 1728 is reckoned the best.
- EUSTATHIUS (Ecc.) a native of Sida, in Pamphylia, and patriarch of Antioch, was translated in 323 from the see of Beroea, to the patriarchate of Antioch, and died about 337, after having been banished by Constantine, at the instigation of the Arians, to Trajanopolis, in Thrace. He wrote several works, of which none are remaining except his Treatise on the Pythoness, published by Leo Allatius, 4to. 1689, with another treatise entitled 'Exameron,' attributed to this Eustathius, but supposed to have been written by some more modern author. Fusch. in Vit. Constant. c. 59; S. Athanas. passim; S. Hieron. Cat.; Socrates, Sozomenes, Theodoretus, &c.; Phot. Elog.; Tillemont. Mem.; Du Pin. Bibliothek.
- EUSTATHIUS, a patriarch of Constantinople, succeeded Sergius in 1019, and held the see until 1025.
- EUSTATHIUS, an heretical bishop of Sebaste, in Armenia, enjoyed for a time, the friendship of S. Basil, until he was found to be unworthy of it. Socrates and Sozomenes make him to be the same as Eustathius, an heretical monk, who, by others, is taken to be a different person. Socrat. l. 2; Sozom. l. 3; S. Epiphani. Hær. 40; Baronius. Annal.; Herm. in Vit. S. Bas.
- EUSTATHIUS, a bishop of Thessalonica, and a celebrated grammarian, in the reigns of Emanuel, Alexis, and Andronicus Comnenus, is well known among scholars as the author of Commentaries upon Homer and Dionysius Periegetes. His 'Commentaries upon Homer,' were first published with that poet at Rome in 1550, and reprinted ten years after by Frobenius at Basil. His 'Commentaries upon the Periegesis of Dionysius,' were first published at Paris in 1577; they were afterwards greatly augmented by Fabricius, who supplied a hiatus between verses 889 and 917, which addition was inserted in its proper place by Hudson, in his edition of the 'Geographia Veteris Scriptores.' In Aldus' collection of Greek grammarians, is a treatise by this Eustathius on the dialects used by Homer; besides which are the MSS. in the Escorial, the library of Basil, and the Bodleian, containing Sermons and Orations ascribed to him.
- EUSTATHIUS (Biog.) author of a work entitled 'De Ismenie et Ismenes Amorgibus XI,' published by Caulminius, 8vo. Gr. and Lat. Paris. 1618. The author of this work being totally unknown, it has, without any other reason, been attributed to the commentator of this name above-mentioned.
- EUSTOCHIUS (Ecc.) a patriarch of Jerusalem, was elected in 552 to this see, which he held till his death in 562, when Macarius, who had been previously deposed, was re-elected.
- EUSTON, Earl (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the duke of Grafton.
- EUSTRATIUS (Ecc.) bishop of Nice in the 12th century, was the author of some theological treatises, besides some Greek commentaries on Aristotle's latter analytics and ethics, which are still extant, the former being published at Venice in 1534, and the latter in 1536; also at Paris in 1543.
- EUTERPE (Myth.) one of the Muses, daughter of Jupiter and Mnemosyne. [Vide Musæ]
- EUTERPE (Numis.) vide Pomponia, gens.
- EUTHALIUS (Ecc.) bishop of Sulce, in Egypt, in the fifth century, was the first author of the division of the Epistles, &c. into lessons.
- EUTHYCRATES (Biog.) a sculptor of Sicily, son of Lysippus. His statues of Hercules, Alexander, and Medea, were most in esteem. Plin. l. 3, c. 1.
- EUTHYDEMUS (Hist.) son of Theodoric, king of Bactriana, reigned in that country, after having expelled his brother Theodotus. He defended himself with much valour and success against Antiochus the Great.
- EUTHYMIUS (Ecc.) bishop of Sardis, in Asia, in the 11th century, was one of the most zealous defenders of the worship of images, for which he was banished to Bithynia, and died by the way in consequence of ill treatment.
- EUTHYMIUS (Biog.) a celebrated boxer of Locri, who gained the prize at the Olympic games every time he disputed it. Plin. l. 7, c. 47; Paus. in Eliac.
- EUTHYMIUS (Numis.) the memory of this wrestler is preserved on some medals, where either he, or Nero under his form, is represented, bearing the inscription, EUTHYMIUS, or EUTIMIUS.
- EUTHYMIUS, Zigabenus, or Zigadenus, a Greek monk of Constantinople, in favour with Alexis Comnenus, whom he survived, wrote, at the request of the latter, his 'Panoplia Dogmatica Orthodoxæ Fidei,' printed in 8vo. Lugd. Bat. 1556, and Tergovist in Wallachia, 1710; besides which he wrote some other theological works.
- EUTOCIUS (Biog.) a Greek mathematician of Ascalon, in Palestine, who flourished in the sixth century, wrote commentaries on the Conics of Apollonius, which are inserted in Halley's edition of that author, fol. Oxon. 1710; and also commentaries on the most important works of Archimedes, published with the original by Torelli, fol. Oxon. 1792.
- EUTROPIA, Galeria Valeria (Hist.) an empress, and wife of Maximianus Hercules, was the mother of Maxentius.
- EUTROPIUS (Hist.) a man of dignity in the reign of Julian, although better known as an historian, bore arms under this emperor, and attended him on the expedition against the Persians, in which the latter lost his life. He wrote an epitome of the Roman history; the best editions of which are those of Haverkamp, cum notis variorum, 8vo. 1729, and of Verheyk, Lugd. Bat. 1762.
- EUTROPIUS, a eunuch at the court of Arcadius, who, rendering himself odious by his cruelties, was beheaded in 399. Code Theodosian. de Pen. l. 7; S. Joh. Chrysostom. Serm. in Eutrop.; Socrates, Sozomenes, Nicephorus, &c.
- EUTROPIUS (Ecc.) bishop of Orange in the fifth century, was born at Marseilles, distinguished himself by his piety and his austerities.

EUTROPUS, a bishop of Valencia, in Spain, was the author of a letter, entitled, 'De Distinctione Monachorum,' &c. Du Pin, Biblioth.

EUTYCHES (Ecc.) abbot of a celebrated monastery of Constantinople in the fifth century, who, in combatting the errors of Nestorius, broached a new heresy touching the two distinct natures of Christ. He was deposed from his office as abbot in a council assembled at Constantinople in 448, but restored by a violent assembly at Ephesus, which was denominated συνδος ληστρικη, or the synod of robbers. His doctrine was afterwards formally condemned in the fourth oecumenical, or general council, assembled for this purpose by Theodosius in 451, where 630 bishops were present. Of the works of this Eutyches nothing remains but two Supplications to Theodosius, one Confession, and a fragment of another.

EUTYCHES (Biog.) or Eutychus, a grammarian and disciple of Priscian, wrote, 'De Aspiratione;' noticed by Cassiodorus in the ninth chapter of his work on Orthography; also two books, 'De discernendis Conjugationibus;' printed with some pieces by Victorinus and Servius, 4to. Tubing. 1537; also inserted in Putschius' edition of the 'Grammatici Veteres,' 4to. Hanov. 1605.

EUTYCHIANUS (Hist.) surnamed Comacon, a powerful favourite with Heliogabalus, who rose to the highest offices in the state.

EUTYCHIANUS (Ecc.) a pope, native of the ancient city of Luna, succeeded Felix I in 275, and died a martyr in 283, when he was succeeded by S. Caius.

EUTYCHIUS (Ecc.) a patriarch of Alexandria, in the ninth and tenth centuries, wrote Annals, in the Arabic tongue, from the commencement of the world to 937. They were printed, with a Latin version, by Pocock, 2 vols. 4to. Oxon. 1659; an extract from them, however, had been previously printed by Selden, Arab. and Lat. 4to. Lond. 1642. Besides the Annals, Eutychius wrote 'De Rebus Siciliæ;' the MS. of which, subjoined to the Annals, is now in the public library at Cambridge.

EWALD, John (Biog.) a Danish poet, was born at Copenhagen in 1743, and died in 1781, leaving some works, which were printed in 4 vols. 8vo. 1781—1791.

EUXINUS, Pontus (Geog.) the Euxine, or Black Sea, as it is now called, a sea between the Thracian and Cimmerian Bosphorus, surrounded on all sides by high ridges of mountains; or, according to modern geography, it is bounded on the W. by European Turkey, E. by Mingrelia, Circassia, and Georgia, N. by Russian Tartary, S. by Nalolia. It was formerly called ἄενος, i. e. inhospitable, on account of the savage manners of its inhabitants; this name was afterwards changed into Euxinus.

History of Exeter.

Exeter, called by the Latins Isca, is supposed to have been the station of a Roman legion, under the command of Agricola. It has suffered at different times very grievously from the ravages of war. It was twice destroyed by the Danes; taken by William the Conqueror; besieged by Stephen and Edward; and in the reign of Henry VII by Perkin Warbeck; but made so brave a defence that he was compelled to raise the siege, for which instance of fidelity and valour the king presented the city with a sword, worn by himself, which is carried before the mayor in processions. It was no less distinguished for loyalty during the rebellion, when it was blockaded by the rebel force under lord Fairfax for two months; and its Castle, called Rougemont, and supposed to have been founded by the Saxons, was utterly destroyed, so that nothing remains now but the outer wall.

Ecclesiastical History of Exeter.

This town was erected into a bishop's see in 1049. Its first bishop, Leofroi, died in 1073. Camd. Britain.

EXIMENO, Antonio (Biog.) a Spanish Ex-Jesuit of Balbastro, was born in 1732, and died in 1798, leaving, 1. 'The Spanish Military History,' 4to. Segovia, 1769. 2. 'The Engineer's Manual,' 8vo. 1772, intended as a supplement to the preceding. 3. 'Dell' Origine e della Regole della Musica,' 4to. Rome, 1775. 4. 'Lettera del Sig. Abate Eximeno al R. P. M. Fr. FABER, John (Ecc.) a divine of Suabia, was born in 1479, advanced to the see of Vienna in 1531, and died in 1542, leaving many controversial works, published in 3 vols. fol. Colon. 1537—1541, the most celebrated of which is entitled 'Malleus Hereticorum.'

FABER, Basil, a Lutheran divine of Soraw, in Lusatia, on the confines of Silesia, who was born in 1520, is principally known as the author of 'Thesaurus Eruditionis scholasticæ,' which was first published in 1571, and afterwards augmented by Buchner, Thomasius, Cellarius, and the two Græviuses, father and son, in 2 vols. fol. Francof. 1749.

FABER, John, the name of two engravers, father and son, natives of Holland, whose works are held in some estimation by portrait collectors. The elder Faber died in 1721, and the younger about 1750.

FABER, vide Favre and Fevre.

FABERT, Abraham (Hist.) a marshal of France, distinguished himself under Louis XIV, at the siege of Turin in 1640, at that of Perpignan in 1642, and at the taking of Stenai, &c. in 1654. His Life by father Barre, regular canon of St. Genevieve, was published in 2 vols. 12mo. Paris, 1752; but previously in 1 vol. 12mo.

FABIA, gens (Hist.) a powerful patrician family of Rome, which derives its descent from Fabius, the son of Hercules. His descendants were once so numerous that they took upon themselves to wage war with the Veientes; but were all slain in a general engagement, A. C. 477, except one, whose tender age had detained him at Rome, from whom descended the noble family of the Fabii, in subsequent ages.

Ovid. Fast. l. 2.

*Una dies Fabius ad bellum miserat omnes,
Ad bellum missos perdidit una dies.*

This family was divided into the several branches of the Ambusti, Maximi, Vibulani, Buteones, Pictones, Labeones, Hispanienses, Licini, &c. [Vide Fabius] Cic. in Cat. Mag.; Dionys. Hal. l. 1; Liv. l. 1; Plin. l. 18; Aurel. Vict. Vir. Illust.; Plut. in Fab.; Macrobi. Sat. l. 1.

FABIA, gens (Numis.) several coins and medals are extant, bearing the inscriptions of Fabius Ambustus, as K. FABI. AMBUST. COS.—Of Fabius Buteo, as N. FABI. M. F. BUTEO.—Of Fabius Maximus, as Q. FABI. MAX. SERVILIANUS, &c.—Of Fabius Labeo, as Q. FABI. LABEO.—Of Fabius Licinus, as M. FABI. C. F. LICINUS. The types on most of their coins are a figure of Jupiter in a chariot and four, having thunder in his hand, or the prow of a ship, to denote their power in arms, &c. Vail Fam.; Morel. Thes. Fam.; Beg. Thesaur.

FABIAN, St. (Ecc.) a pope, who succeeded Antherius in 236, and died a martyr in 250, was distinguished by his zeal in the propagation of the faith, and regarded as the apostle of France, having sent the seven celebrated bishops, St. Saturnine, of Thoulouse; St. Trophimes, of Arles; St. Gratian, of Tours; St. Dionysius, of Paris; St. Paul, of Narbonne; St. Austremoine, of Clermont; St. Martial, of Limoges, on their holy mission into that country. Euseb. Hist. Eccles. l. 6; Anast. in Vit. &c.

FABIAN (Biog.) vide Fabian.

FABIUS, M. (Hist.) was twice consul, and after having beaten the Veientes, refused the triumph that was decreed to him, on account of the death of his brother, M. Fabius, who was slain there. This latter had also been consul three times. Liv. l. 2.

FABIUS CÆSO, brother of M. and Q., a quæstor, and three times consul, was killed with the rest of the Fabii, at the battle of Cremera, where he commanded, U. C. 277, A. C. 477. Liv. l. 2.

FABIUS, Q. or M. Vibulanus, the only survivor of the family after the above-mentioned slaughter, was consul U. C. 286, A. C. 468, and again U. C. 289; during this latter consulship he defeated the Æqui and the Volsci, after which he was banished. Liv. l. 3.

FABIUS CÆSO AMBUSTUS, was three times military tribune with consular power. Liv. l. 4.

FABIUS DORSO, C. habited in the Gabinian vest, passed through the army of the Gauls to the Mons Quirinalis, in order to perform a sacrifice; and, after having gone through the necessary rites, he returned by the same rout to the capitol, unmolested by the enemy, who were awed by the solemnity of the spectacle. Liv. l. 5.

FABIUS, Q. was sent on an embassy to the Gauls, with his two brothers, U. C. 364, A. C. 390, when he engaged with their leader in combat, and slew him. Liv. l. 5.

FABIUS AMBUSTUS, M. was consul three times, and dictator once. During his second consulship, U. C. 398, A. C. 356, he obtained a victory over the Falisci, and afterwards triumphed over the Tiburtini and the Tarquinii. Liv. l. 6, &c.

FABIUS MAXIMUS, Q. surnamed Rullianus, the first of the Fabii, to whom the surname of Maximus was given, because he lessened the power of the populace at elections, was five times consul, namely, U. C. 432, 444, 446, 457, and 459; twice dictator, i. e. U. C. 439, and 453; and once censor, U. C. 450. He obtained seven different triumphs, and rendered himself no less celebrated as a statesman than as a general. Liv. l. 8, &c.

FABIUS MAXIMUS, Q. surnamed Gurgæ, son of the preceding, was defeated by the Samnites, and would have been disgraced by the senate, if his father had not offered to go to his assistance in the character of his lieutenant, when he totally routed the Samnites, and thus wiped off the ignominy which threatened his family and the Roman arms. Livy, Florus, Aurelius Victor, Eutropius, Cassiodorus, &c.

FABIUS PICTOR, C. was consul U. C. 481, A. C. 273. He was father of the annalist Fabius Pictor.

FABIUS PICTOR, Q. the annalist, and son of the preceding, was sent to Delphos, after the battle of Cannæ, to inquire by what supplications the gods might be appeased. He wrote an account both in Greek and Latin, as is supposed, of the war with Annibal. Fragments of his works are scattered among the ancient writers; but the history which bears his name, and was attributed to him, is now known to be the forgery of Viterbo. Polyb. l. 1; Cic. ad Fam. l. 1, ep. 26; Liv. l. 1, 22, &c.

FABIUS PICTOR, C. and M. the name of two consuls at the same time.

FABIUS, Butco, a consul U. C. 507; and M. Fabius Butco, also a consul U. C. 509.

FABIUS, Licinus, a consul U. C. 508.

FABIUS MAXIMUS, Q. the illustrious Roman general, was surnamed Verrucosus, from a wart on his lip, but is better known by the surname of Cunctator, when, as the antagonist of Annibal, he delayed his operations against this successful and formidable enemy in such a manner as to revive the broken spirits of his countrymen, and pave the way for the final expulsion of the Carthaginians from Italy.

FABIUS MAXIMUS, Q. son of the preceding, and also a consul, seeing his father coming towards him without alighting, he sent to command him to dismount; on which the father embraced him, saying, "I wished to know if you knew what it is to be a consul."

FABIUS LABEO, Q. was consul U. C. 568, A. C. 186; and Pontifex U. C. 572. Liv. l. 33, 40.

FABIUS PICTOR, surnamed Numerius, or Quintus, the Flamen Quirinalis, was the son of C. Fabius Pictor, the consul. He died U. C. 585, A. C. 169, after having governed the province of Sardinia as a prætor.

FABIUS MAXIMUS SERVILIANUS, Q. Pontifex Maximus, and consul with Metellus, U. C. 612, A. C. 142, made war on Viriathus, a Spanish chieftain. He was the author of Annals cited by Macrobius. Macrobi. Saturn. l. 8; Vossius, &c.

FABIUS MAXIMUS, surnamed Allobrogicus, a consul U. C. 633, A. C. 121, acquired great reputation by his skill and valour. He was surnamed Allobrogicus, because he defeated the Allobroges, and formed from their country the modern provinces of Provence and Dauphiny. He was censor in 646, and left a son so dissolute that he was deprived of his paternal inheritance. Cic. pro Font.; Vell. Paterc. l. 2; Val. Max. l. 3; Cassiodorus, &c.

FABIUS, a military tribune in the army of Pompey, and one of the first who entered the breach at the storming of Jerusalem. He was afterwards governor of Damascus, when he received orders to assist Herod against Antigonus; but suffered himself to be bribed. Joseph. l. 14.

FABIUS (Ecc.) bishop of Antioch in the third century, died in 252, after having governed the church of Antioch for two years. Euseb. in Chron.; Baronius' Annals, &c.

FABIUS (Biog.) a painter of the Fabian family, who was surnamed Pictor, because he painted the temple of Salus. This name descended to his posterity, of whom was the consul C. Fabius Pictor, his son, and Q. Fabius Pictor the annalist, his grandson, and others, mentioned under History.

FABIUS, Dossenus, or Dorsenus, a poet, of the same family, and author of the farces or pantomimes called 'Atellane.' Plin. l. 14, c. 18.

FABIUS, Rusticus, an historian, who lived in the time of the emperors Claudian and Nero; was the particular friend of Seneca. Tacit. Annal. l. 14, &c.

FABIUS, Marcellinus, an historian of the third century, is quoted by Lampridius, as the author of a Life of Alexander, son of Mamea. Lamprid. in Vit. Prob.; Voss. Hist. Lat.

FABIUS, Sabinus, a lawyer, and disciple of Papinianus, who distinguished himself in the reign of the emperor Alexander. He was called the Cato of the age.

FABRA, Aloysio (Biog.) or Louis della, a physician of Ferrara, was born in 1655, and died in 1723, leaving 'Dissertationes Physico-Medice,' 4to. Ferrara, 1712.

FABRE D'EGLANTINE, Philip Francis Nazaire (Hist.) one of the agents in the French revolution, was born at Carcassane in 1755; and, after assisting Robespierre, and his faction, in "carrying throughout France fire and sword, devastation and death," he was, by order of the latter, dragged to the scaffold in 1794, with Danton and his guilty accomplices. Fabre d'Eglantine might have left an honest name behind him had he confined himself to writing for the stage, in which he was allowed to have merit. A collection of his works, including his poems, plays, and posthumous pieces were published in 2 vols. 1802.

FABRE, John Claudius (Biog.) a French compiler, was born at Paris in 1668, and died in 1755, leaving a 'Continuation de l'Histoire Ecclesiastique, de Feu M. L'Abbé Fleury,' 16 vols. 4to. or 12mo.; besides an edition of Richet's Dictionary, in 2 vols. fol. and an index to M. de Thou's History, translated into French.

FABRETTI, Raphael (Biog.) an antiquary of Urbino, was born in 1619, and died in 1700, leaving, 1. 'De Aquis et Aqueductis veteris Romæ Dissertationes tres,' 4to. Romæ, 1680; also inserted in the fourth volume of Grævius' Thesaurus Antiquitatum Romanorum. 2. 'De Columna Trajana Syntagma,' &c. fol. Romæ, 1683. 3. 'Jasithei ad Grunnovium Apologema,' &c. 4to. Neapol. 1686. 4. 'Inscriptionum Antiquarum,' &c. fol. Rom. 1699.

FABRI, Honoré (Biog.) a Jesuit, and a medical writer, was born in the diocese of Bellay in 1606 or 1607, and died in 1688, leaving, among other things, 1. 'Pulvis Peruvianus febrifugus vindicatus.' 2. 'De Plantis et Generatione Animalium.' 3. 'De Homine,' which were published at Paris in 1666, and at Nuremberg in 1677. His theological works were mostly controversial.

FABRIANO, Gentile da (Biog.) a painter of Verona, was born in 1332, and died in 1412. A picture of his in the great council chamber of Venice, executed by order of the doge and the senate, procured him a pension for life, and the privilege of wearing the habit of a Venetian nobleman.

FABRICIUS, Caius Luscinus (Hist.) a celebrated Roman, was consul twice, namely, U. C. 472, A. C. 282, and U. C. 476; and censor once, in 479. In his first consulship, he obtained several victories over the Samnites and Lucanians, which brought immense wealth to the state. He was afterwards sent on an embassy to Pyrrhus, who in vain attempted to corrupt his fidelity; and, during his second consulship while making war on this king, he sent his physician back to him, who had been offering the Roman general to poison his master for a sum of money. He died poor, and was buried at the public expense.

FABRICIUS, Baron, the descendant of a good family in Germany, and a favourite of Charles XII, with whom he resided as envoy from Holstein, during that monarch's captivity at Bender, is better known to the public by his literary than by his diplomatic character, particularly as the author of some interesting letters respecting Charles XII during his residence in Turkey, which were translated, and published in England in 8vo. Lond. 1761.

FABRICIUS (Ecc.) of Marliano, at first bishop of Tortona, was in 1476 translated to the bishopric of Placentia, after which he was much in the confidence of John Calcazzi, and also of Louis, dukes of Milan, being esteemed an able prelate, and a skilful negotiator. He wrote a History of the Bishops of Placentia, published by Muratori in the 16th volume of his Collection of Italian Authors.

FABRICIUS, Veiento (Biog.) a prætor and scurrilous writer in the reign of Nero, employed his pen in defaming the senators and great men, on which account his books were burnt by order of the emperor, and he himself banished. Tacit. Annal. l. 14.

FABRICIUS, George a Latin poet of Chemnitz, in Misnia, was born in 1516, and died in 1571, leaving numerous Latin poems, which appeared in 2 vols. 8vo. Basil. 1567; besides which he wrote in prose, 1. 'Roma,' 1550. 2. 'Annals of Misnia.' 3. 'Origines Saxonice,' 2 vols. fol. &c.

FABRICIUS, William, a surgeon, known also by the surname of Hildanus, from Hilden, a village of Switzerland, was born in 1560, and died in 1634, leaving several works on surgical subjects, which were collected and published under the title of 'Opera omnia,' fol. Francof. 1646 and 1682. A German edition also appeared in 1652.

FABRICIUS, Jerome, an anatomist, also known by the name of Hieronymus Fabricius ab Aquapendente, from the place of his birth, was born in 1537, and died in 1619. His works, which are numerous, were published together, under the title of 'Opera omnia physiologica et anatomica,' fol. Lips. 1687, and Lugd. Bat. 1723, 1737. His surgical works were also published apart, under the title of 'Opera chirurgica in duas Partes divisa,' Patav. 1618, which went through 17 editions: his other works were likewise printed separately.

FABRICIUS, James, a physician, was born at Rostock in 1577, and died in 1652, leaving, 1. 'Periculum medicum, seu Juveniliu Fæturæ priores,' Hal. 1600. 2. 'Uroscopia, seu de Urinis Tractatus,' Rostoch. 1605. 3. 'De Cephalalgia autumnali,' &c. ibid. 1619. 4. 'Oratio Renunciationi novi Medicinæ Doctoris præmissa,' ibid. 1620. 5. 'Dissertatio de novo-antiquo Capitis Morbo et Dolor,' 1640.

FABRICIUS, Vincent, a poet, was born at Hamburgh in 1613, and died in 1667. The first edition of his poems was printed in 1632, a second in 1638; but the most complete edition is that of Leipzig, 1632.

FABRICIUS, John Lewis, a divine of Schaffhausen, was born in 1639, and died in 1697, leaving several controversial works, which were collected and published with a Life by Heidegger at Zurich, 4to. 1698.

FABRICIUS, John Albert, a laborious scholar, son of Werner Fabricius, a poet and a man of letters, was born in 1668, and died in 1736, leaving, as stupendous monuments of his industry and erudition, the following works, 1. 'Scriptorum Recentiorum Decas,' 4to. Hamb. 1688. 2. 'Defensio Decadis,' &c. without place or date. 3. 'Decas Decadum sive Plagiariorum et Pseudonymorum Centuria,' 4to. Lips. 4. 'Grammatica Græca Walleri,' 8vo. ibid. 1689, often reprinted, but without the name of Fabricius. 5. 'Bibliotheca Latina, sive Notitia Auctorum Veterum Latinorum,' &c. 8vo. Hamb. 1697; but the best edition is that of Venice, 2 vols.

- 4to. 1728. The edition by Ernesti in 3 vols. 8vo. 1773, is not free from typographical errors. 6. 'Vita Procli Philosophi Platonici Scriptore Marino Neapolitano,' &c. 4to. Hamb. 1700. 7. 'Codex Apocryphus N. T.' &c. 8vo. ibid. 1703. 8. 'Bibliotheca Græca, sive Notitia Scriptorum Veterum Græcorum,' &c.; the third edition 14 vols. 4to. 1718-28. The first volume of the first edition was printed as early as 1705, and a new edition has since been begun by Harles, of which 12 vols. 4to. were published in 1811. 9. 'Centuria Fabriciorum Scriptis Clarorum,' &c. 8vo. Hamb. 1700, and a second part, 1727. 10. 'Memoriæ Hamburgenses,' 7 vols. 1710-1730. 11. 'Codex Pseudepigraphus Veteris Testamenti,' as a companion to his preceding account of the apocryphal writers of the New Testament, 8vo. ibid. 1713 and 1722. 12. 'Menologium, sive Libellus de Mensibus,' &c. 8vo. ibid. 1712. 13. 'Bibliographia Antiquaria, sive Introductio in Notitiam Scriptorum, qui Antiquitates Hebræicas, Græcas, Romanas, et Christianas Scriptis illustrarunt,' 4to. 1713, and enlarged 1716. 14. 'Mathematische Remonstrations,' &c. 8vo. Hamburg, 1714. 15. 'S. Hippolyti Opera non antea collecta,' &c. Gr. and Lat. 2 vols. fol. 1716 and 1718. 16. 'Bibliotheca Ecclesiastica,' fol. ibid. 1718. 17. - FAIRFAX, Thomas, first Lord (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, accompanied the earl of Essex, general of the English army, sent to the assistance of king Henry IV of France, and was knighted by the earl in the camp before Rouen in 1591. He was afterwards employed by queen Elizabeth, and died in 1640. He had four of his sons killed in battle abroad, in the same year, 1621, namely, the Hon. William Fairfax, in defence of the city of Frankendale, in the Palatinate; Hon. John Fairfax, in the Palatinate; Hon. Peregrine Fairfax, at Rochelle; and the Hon. Thomas Fairfax, killed in Turkey.
- FAIRFAX, Ferdinand, second Lord, took up arms against his sovereign, in the grand rebellion, and after gaining many victories over the loyalists, and taking all their garrisons, he died governor of York in 1647. [Vide Plate XVIII]
- FAIRFAX, Thomas, third Lord, followed the disgraceful steps of his father during the rebellion, which he aided most powerfully by his arms, but being outwitted by the intrigues of the triumphant party, he withdrew from public life until the Restoration, in which he took such a part as to enable him to make his peace with the court. He then retired again to the country, and died in 1671, in the 60th year of his age. [Vide Plate XVIII] He published Memorials of the Northern Actions during the Rebellion from 1642 to 1644, besides some Sermons, and other things of a puritanical cast, the MSS. of which were in Mr. Thoresby's Museum.
- FAIRFAX, Thomas, sixth Lord, impatient of restraint, and bred up in revolutionary principles, preferred the wilds of America to his native country, and died lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of Frederick county, and also president of the provincial court at Winchester in 1782, at the age of 91.
- FAIRFAX (Her.) the name of a family of Saxon origin, of which mention has been made under History. - FARINATO, Paul (Biog.) a painter of Verona, was born in 1522, and died in 1606. His mother died as she was bringing him into the world; and his wife, who was lying in an adjoining room, died at the same moment as himself. A piece of his painting, in St. George's Church at Verona, was esteemed not inferior to one of Paul Veronese, which was placed next to it.
- FARINELLI (Biog.) vide Broschi.
- FARINGDON, Anthony (Biog.) an English divine, was born at Sunning, in Berks, in 1596; educated at Oxford; and, after being driven by the rebels from his vicarage of Bray, he died in 1658, leaving two folio volumes of sermons, one of which was published before, and the other after his decease; also in MS. Memorials of John Hales, of Eaton, his fellow sufferer.
- FARINGTON, George (Biog.) an artist, and son of the Rev. William Farington, of Warrington, was born in 1754, and died in 1788. His best piece which he painted in India was his Durbar, or the Court of the Nabob at Mereshoodabad.
- FARMER, Captain (Hist.) one of the naval heroes of our own country in the last century, who, after a gallant action with a French frigate of superior force, was burnt in his ship, the Quebec, with many of his crew, in consequence of the vessel taking fire.
- FARMER (Her.) the name of a family seated at Mount Pleasant, in Sussex, and descended from the Farmers of Youghall, in the county of York, of which place Captain Farmer above-mentioned was a native. His son, sir George Farmer, was created a baronet in 1779, as a reward for the gallant services of his father. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

'The Stage Coach,' a Farce, 1704. 7. 'The Twin Rivals,' 1705, a Comedy. 8. 'The Recruiting Officer,' 1706. 9. 'The Beaux Stratagem,' his last Comedy, which has kept its place on the stage longer than any of the preceding pieces. [Vide Plate XXXI]

FARRAR (Biog.) vide Ferrari.

FARRINGDON (Geog.) a town of Berkshire, in England, about two miles from the river Thames, 17 m. N. E. Oxford, 70 W. N. W. London. Lon. $1^{\circ} 30' W.$ lat. $51^{\circ} 30' N.$ The Saxon kings had a palace here, wherein Edward the Elder died in 925. In 1144 Robert, earl of Gloucester, built a castle here, which being taken by king Stephen was razed to the ground; but the site of it was given by king John to the Cistercian monks for a monastery. Its Gothic church suffered from the attacks of the rebel forces during the rebellion.

FARRINGTON (Her.) the name of a family of Kent, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1818 on sir Anthony Farrington, a general in the army; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Ermine, on a chevron gules, between three leopards' faces sable, as many bombs or, fired proper.

Crest. On a wreath of the colours, a dragon, wings elevated, tail nowed vert, bezanty gorged with a mural crown argent, and chain reflexed over the back or, the body charged with two galtraps, fessway of the last.

Motto. "Le bon temps viendra."

FASSOLO, Bernardino (Biog.) an artist of Pavia, who flourished about 1518. The only picture which can with certainty be ascribed to him, represents, in a group of natural size, the Madonna, with the Infant in her Lap, which belonged to the gallery of prince Braschi, and was carried by the French to the Louvre.

FASTOLFF, Sir John (Hist.) a valiant general, governor, and nobleman, in France, during our conquests in that kingdom, under Henry IV, V, and VI, was born, as is generally supposed, at Yarmouth, and died at the age of 80, in 1459, after having signalized himself in the field through a long course of active service. He was also the patron of learning, and a most liberal benefactor to Magdalen College, Oxford. Some have supposed that Shakespeare ridiculed this knight under the name of Sir John Falstaff; but the character drawn by the poet is so widely different from the real character of sir John Fastollf, as to preclude the idea that he ever could have been the intended object of ridicule.

FATIO (Biog.) vide Faccio.

FAUCHET, Claude (Biog.) a French antiquary, was born at Paris in 1529, and died in 1601. His works were collected in 4to. in 1610, the principal of which are his 'Gaulish and French Antiquities,' 'A Treatise on the Liberties of the Gallican Church,' &c. According to Saxius an edition of his works was printed in 2 vols. 4to. 1710, which is supposed to be a mistake for 1610.

FAUCHEUR, Michael le (Biog.) a French Protestant preacher, who died in 1657, was the author of 'Traité de l'Action de l'Orateur,' 12mo. Leyden, 1686; besides Sermons, &c.

FAUCONBERG, Thomas, Viscount (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, distinguished himself for his loyalty during the rebellion, and died in 1652.

FAUCONBERG, Thomas, second Viscount and first Earl, grandson of the preceding, was indeed, notwithstanding the loyalty of his family, to marry the daughter of Oliver Cromwell; but he afterwards concurred in the restoration of Charles II, and was by him employed as ambassador to the states of Venice, &c. He was also in the confidence of William III, and died in 1700.

FAUCONBERG, Earl (Her.) a title which was enjoyed twice by the family of Bellasis, or Belasyse. It was conferred in 1689 on Thomas Bellasis, second viscount Fauconberg, and became extinct at his death in 1700. It was afterwards revived in another branch of the same family in 1760, when Thomas, grand nephew of the first earl, was created earl Fauconberg, of Newborough, in Yorkshire; and became extinct in 1802, at the death of Henry, the second earl.

FAUCONBERG, Viscount, a title which has continued in the family of Bellasis, or Belasyse above-mentioned, since 1647, when sir Thomas Belasyse, bart. and lord Fauconberg, the loyalist before-mentioned, was advanced to the dignity of viscount Fauconberg. The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Motto. "Bon et belle assez."

FAVIGNANA (Geog.) the ancient Ægusa, one of the islands called Ægates, about five miles from the west coast of Sicily.

FAUNA (Myth.) a deity among the Romans, so called from her husband Faunus. She was originally called Macrina, and, from her knowledge of futurity, Fatua and Fatidica. Virg. Æn. l. 7; Varro, apud Lactant. de Falsa Relig. c. 22; Horat. l. 1, od. 4, &c.; Ovid. Met. l. 6; Justin. l. 43; Macroh. Sat. l. 1.

FAUNA (Numis.) vide Faunus.

FAUNI (Myth.) rustic deities among the Romans, of whom Faunus and Fauna were the principal. [Vide Faunus]

FAUNT, Arthur (Biog.) or Lawrence, Arthur, an English Jesuit, was born at Foston, in Leicestershire, in 1554, and died in 1591, leaving many theological works, that were well esteemed in his day.

FAUNUS (Myth.) a son of Picus, who is said to have reigned in Italy about 1300 years A. C. He was reputed to be the son of Mars, and worshipped as a deity.

FAUNUS (Numis.) this deity was represented in statues or on medals, mostly as in the annexed figure, dancing, with some of the musical instruments in his hands, that were used at the feasts of Bacchus, and Fauna or a fauness is represented in a playful attitude, to denote the frolicsomeness which was attributed to them. They were something of the ferine kind, as their tails, horns, and pointed ears, testify. Goltz. Græc. tom. xiii.; Haverkamp. Num. Contorn.; Spencer. Polym.

FAUR, Guy de (Biog.) or Lord of Pibrac, was born at Toulouse in 1528, and died in 1584, leaving, 1. 'Ornatissimi ejusdam Viri de Rebus Gallicis Epistola et ad hunc de iisdem Rebus Responsio.' 2. 'Quatrains,' or moral Stanzas of four Lines, &c. first published in 1574; the last edition probably that of 1746.

FAVORINUS (Biog.) an ancient philosopher and orator, was born at Arles, and flourished in the reign of Adrian. Several works are ascribed to him, particularly a Greek Miscellaneous History, frequently quoted by Diogenes Laertius.

FAVORINUS vide Phaenippus.

FAVOUR, John (Biog.) an English divine, was born at Southampton, educated at Oxford, and died at an advanced age in 1623, leaving a work entitled 'Antiquitie triumphing over Novelty; whereby it is proved that Antiquitie is a true and certain Note against all new and upstart Heresies,' &c. 4to. London, 1619.

FAVRE, Anthony (Hist.) in Latin Faber, a lawyer of Bresse, who died in 1624, after having been employed on several negotiations by the duke of Savoy. His works, chiefly on jurisprudence and civil law, form 10 volumes folio, printed from 1658 to 1661.

FAVRE, Claude (Biog.) vide Vangelus.

FAUST (Biog.) vide Fust.

FAUSTA (Hist.) a daughter of Sylla, wife to Milo. Cic. ad Attic. l. 5, ep. 8; Plut. in Syll.

FAUSTA, Flavia Maximiana, daughter of the emperor Valerius Maximianus, and wife to the emperor Constantine, was put to death by suffocation in a hot bath in 327, by order of the emperor, in consequence of her debaucheries. Ammian. Marcellin. l. 4; Euseb. Hist. Eccles.; Evagrius, &c.

FAUSTA (Numis.) the medals of this empress bear on the obverse her effigy, as in the annexed figure; the inscriptions FL. MAX. FAUSTA. AUG.—FLA. FLAV. or FLAVIA MAXIMIANA AUGUSTA; on the reverse, PIETAS AUGUSTAE.—SALUS REIPUBLICAE, &c. Du Cang. Hist. Byz.; Vail. Præst.; Trist. Comment. Histor.; Spanh. Dissert.; Beg. Thes. Brand.; Oisel. Sel. Num.

FAUSTINA, Annia Galeria (Hist.) wife of the emperor Antoninus Pius, died A. D. 141, in the 37th year of her age, after making herself notorious for her debaucheries. Capitolin. in Vit. Anton.

FAUSTINA, daughter of the preceding, and wife of M. Aurelius, followed the vicious courses of her mother, which were known to the emperor, but overlooked by him. She died in 175, near Mount Taurus, in Asia, whilst attending her husband in his expedition in Asia Capitolia.

FAUSTINA, Annia, the third wife of Heliogabalus, and granddaughter of the preceding, was unlike her predecessors in her moral conduct, but inferior to them in personal charms.

FAUSTINA, Flavia Maxima, the wife of Constantius, to whom she was married in 361.

FAUSTINA (Numis.) medals are extant of the three first empresses of this name, bearing on the obverse their effigies, as in the subjoined figures. The medals of Faustina, sen.

bore the symbols of her consecration; inscriptions on the obverse, FAUSTINA AUG.—FAUSTINA AUG. ANTONINI AUG.—FAUSTINA AUG. ANTONINI AUG. P. P. P.—OBV. FAUSTINA. On the reverse, AED. DIV. Lips. 1596.

FELIX, de Cantalicio, an Italian scholar of the 15th century, wrote 'Summa Artis Metricæ,' &c.

FELIX, Samuel (Hist.) an English divine, was born in 1594; elected student of Christ Church from Westminster School in 1601; took his degree of A. M. in 1608; appointed Vice-Chancellor in 1645, which office he served in contempt of the usurping powers, who obtruded themselves upon the University under the name of visitors; and, after having been obliged to abscond in order to save his life, he died in 1648-9, broken hearted, on the very day he heard of the murder of his royal master. The only works of his mentioned by Wood are, 1. 'Primitiæ, sive Oratio habita Oxoniæ in Schola Theologiæ, 9 Nov. 1626.' 2. 'Concio Latina ad Baccalaureos, Die Cinerum in Colono II. 8.' Oxon. 1627. He contributed very largely to Christ Church College, completing most of the improvements begun by his predecessor, Dr. Duppa.

FELIX, John, son of the preceding, was born in 1625, and, after fighting in support of the royal cause, he was, at the restoration, made successively Prebendary of Chichester, Dean of Christ Church, and Vice-Chancellor of the University, and died in 1686, after having contributed to restor-

the discipline of the University by his vigilance and zeal, and to adorn its exterior by the most liberal benefactions towards its public works, particularly the buildings of Christ Church, which received material improvements at his hands. Among his works as an author are, 1. 'The Life of the most Reverend, Learned, and Pious Dr. Henry Hammond,' &c. 1660; and reprinted afterwards with additions at the head of Hammond's works. 2. 'Alcinoi in Platoniam Philosophiam Introductio,' 1667. 3. 'In Caudem Musices Carmen Sapphicum.' 4. 'Historia et Antiquitates Universitatis Oxoniæ,' 2 vols. fol.; which was translated from the English of Anthony Wood, partly by himself, and partly by Mr. Christopher Ware and Mr. Richard Pears, and published at his charge. 5. 'The Vanity of Scuffling, in a Letter to a Gentleman,' 4to. 1674. 6. An edition of the Greek Testament, 8vo. 1675, which gave rise to Michaelis' edition. 7. 'St. Clement's Two Epistles to the Corinthians,' Gr. and Lat. with notes at the end, 1677. 8. 'Account of Dr. Alltree's Life;' being the Preface to the Doctor's Sermons, published by Dr. Fell. 9. 'Of the Unity of the Church;' translated from the original of St. Cyprian, 1681. 10. A beautiful edition of St. Cyprian's works, revised and illustrated with notes, 1682. 11. 'Artis Logice Compendium;' besides Sermons, &c. Another piece was ascribed to him, entitled, 'The Interest of England stated,' &c. which cannot with certainty be placed among his works.

FELL, John, a dissenting minister of Cockermouth, in Cumberland, was born in 1735, and died in 1797, leaving several pamphlets, &c. of a controversial nature.

FELLER, Joachim (Biog.) a professor of poetry of Leipzig, was born in 1638, and was killed by a fall from a window in his sleep in 1691. He published, 1. 'Cygni quomodogeniti Sanctæ Vitæ Celebrium Cygnæ natorum.' 2. 'Supplementum ad Rappolti Commentarium in Horatium.' 3. 'Flores Philosophici ex Virgilio collecti,' 8vo. Lips. 1681, &c.

FELLER, Joachim Frederic, son of the preceding, was born at Leipzig in 1673, and died in 1726. His principal works were, 1. 'Monumenta varia inedita, variisque Linguis conscripta,' &c. 4to. Jen. 1714, 1715. 2. 'Genealogische Geschichte der Familie von Braunschweig und Lüneburg,' 8vo. Leipzig. 1717. 3. 'Otium Hanoveranum, sive Miscellanea ex Ore et Schedis G. G. Leibnitii quondam notata et descripta,' 8vo. ibid. 1718; besides publishing an enlarged edition of Birken's History of the Saxon Heroes.

'Examen impartial des Epoques de la Nature de M. de Buffon,' 12mo. Luxembourg, 1780; and reprinted a fourth time at Maestricht in 1792; besides a number of MSS. and other works of minor note.

FELLTHAM, Owen (Biog.) an English writer in the reign of James, was the author of 'Resolves, divine, moral, and political;' of which a 12th edition appeared in 8vo. 1709.

FELTON, John (Hist.) a violent papist, who, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, affixed on the palace gates of the bishop of London the bull of Pius V, in which the queen was declared a heretic. He was tried and executed for this crime in 1570.

FELTON, John, grand-son of the preceding, and the assassin of Villiers, duke of Buckingham, in 1628, was tried and executed for this offence, which he professed to have committed under a persuasion of serving God and man. He was a lieutenant in the army, of a gloomy, resentful temper, which had been wrought upon by some injury, real or supposed, to commit this diabolical act.

FELTON, Nicholas (Ecc.) an English prelate, was born at Yarmouth, in Norfolk, and admitted of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, of which he was chosen fellow in 1538. After various preferments, he was promoted to the see of Bristol in 1617, translated to that of Coventry and Lichfield in 1618, and died in 1626, in the 60th year of his age. He was one of those employed by king James I in the translation of the Bible.

FELTON, Henry (Biog.) a divine, and principal of Edmund Hall, Oxford, was born in London in 1679, and died in 1739, leaving, besides a number of occasional sermons, also a tract, entitled, 'The Common People taught to defend their Communion with the Church of England, against the Attempts and Insinuations of Popish Emissaries,' &c. 1728, and 1729. 2. Eight Sermons at Lady Moyer's Lecture at St. Paul's, published in 1732, under the title of the 'Christian Faith asserted against Deists, Arians, and Socinians.' 3. A set of Sermons, 'On the Creation; Fall, and Redemption of Man,' &c. which were published after his death by his son, the Rev. William Felton, in 1748, with a sketch of his father's life and character.

FENELON, Francis de Salignac de la Motte (Ecc.) the celebrated author of Telemachus, descended of an ancient and illustrious family, was born at the Castle of Fenelon, in the province of Perigord, in 1651, consecrated archbishop of Cambrai in 1695, and died in 1715. His principal works, besides his Telemachus, were, 1. 'Education des Filles,' 1688, intended for the instruction of the new female converts. 2. 'Le Ministère des Pasteurs,' 1688. 3. 'Maximes des Saints sur la Vie interieure,' 1697, which brought upon him the charge of quietism, and the condemnation of his book by Innocent XII. 4. 'Dialogues des Morts;' first composed and published for the use of the duke of Burgundy, and afterwards reprinted, with additions, in 2 vols. 12mo. 5. 'Dialogues sur la Peinture,' which were published in 1530. 6. 'L'Existence de Dieu par les Preuves de la Nature,' 12mo.; the third edition of which was printed in 1726, and afterwards reprinted under the title of 'Œuvres philosophiques, ou Demonstration,' &c. 7. 'Dialogues sur l'Eloquence en general, et sur celle de la Chair en particulier,' 12mo. 1718. 8. 'Œuvres et Lettres spirituelles,' 12mo. 1726; and reprinted twice afterwards, the last edition in 1740; besides several pieces in favour of the bull Unigenitus, and against Jansenism, &c. A splendid edition of all his works was published in 9 vols. 4to. Paris, 1787-92; and one of his 'Œuvres choisies,' in 6 vols. 12mo. 1799. [Vide Plate XI]

FENESTELLA, Lucius (Biog.) a Roman historian, who died A. D. 20, at the age of 70. He wrote several works, mentioned by Pliny, Gellius, and others; but one on the Magistrates of Rome, which was falsely attributed to him, is now known to have been the work of Dominicus Floccus, a Florentine, in the 15th century. It was published in 4to. about 1480. Fenestella's 'Fragments,' with notes, were published with Wasse's Sallust, Cantab. 1710.

FENN, John (Biog.) a scholar, and native of Somersetshire, who was chosen a fellow of New College, Oxford, in 1552, and died at an advanced age in 1615, was the author of, 1. 'Vita quorundam Martyrum in Anglia;' inserted in Bridgewater's 'Concertario Ecclesie Catholice in Anglia.' 2. 'Several of Bishop Fisher's English Works translated into Latin.' 3. 'Catechismus Tridentinus,' translated into English. 4. 'Osorius' Treatise against Walter Haddon,' translated into English, 8vo. Lovan. 1568. 5. 'The Life of St. Catherine of Sienna,' from the Italian, 8vo. 1609, &c.

FENN, Sir John, Knt. an English antiquary, was born at Norwich in 1739, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1794, leaving a Collection of Original Letters, written during the reigns of Henry VI, Edward IV, Richard III, and Henry VII, by such of the Paston Family, and others who were personally present in Court and Camp, two volumes of which were published in 4to. 1787; two other volumes in 1789; with notes and illustrations by sir John; and a fifth was left nearly ready for the press.

FENNER, William (Biog.) a puritan, who was educated at Cambridge, and died in 1640, was the author of several works in his way, which were collected and published in fol. in 1658.

FENTON, Edward (Hist.) an English navigator in the reign of Elizabeth, and a descendant from an ancient family in Nottinghamshire, went out on two several voyages to discover a North-West Passage into the South Seas, in the latter of which he obtained a signal victory over the Spaniards. He afterwards distinguished himself against the famous Armada in 1588, and died in 1603.

FENTON, Sir Geoffry, brother of the preceding, and a statesman, in the confidence of queen Elizabeth, was her Secretary of State in Ireland, which office he continued to hold until his death in 1608. He was the means of extinguishing more than one rebellion in Ireland, and left behind him the character of an able statesman, an accomplished courtier, and a polite writer. Among his works as an author, are, 1. 'Certain Tragical Discourses, written out of French and Latin,' 4to. 1567, and again in 1579. 2. 'An Account of a Dispute at Paris, between two Doctors of the Sorbonne, and two Ministers of God's Word,' 1571, a translation. 3. 'An Epistle, or Godly Admonition, sent to the Pastors of the Flemish Church, &c. written by Anthony de Carro,' 1578, a translation. 4. 'Golden Epistles, &c. from Guevara's Works, and other Authors, Latin, French, and Italian,' 1557. This collection contained many pieces not in that of Edward Hellowes, published in English in 1574. 5. A Translation from the Italian of Guicciardini, his 'History of the Wars in Italy,' the dedication of which to queen Elizabeth is dated Jan. 7, 1579.

FENTON, Viscount (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Kellie.

FENTON, Elijah (Biog.) a poet, of an ancient family in Staffordshire, was born at Chelton, near Newcastle-under-Lyne, and died in 1730. Fenton's reputation as a poet rests principally on his 'Mariamne,' and his share in the Odyssey; but his 'Miscellaneous Poems,' printed in 1717, have procured him a place among the English poets, in the collection of Dr. Johnson, by whom his Life was written. [Vide Plate XXXIX]

FERDINAND (Hist.) the name of several emperors, kings, and princes.

Emperors of this Name.

FERDINAND I, archduke of Austria, brother of Charles V, and son of Philip I, archduke of Austria, succeeded his brother on his abdication in 1558, and died in 1564, at the age of 61. The offages of this and the following princes are given, as in the annexed figures.

FERDINAND II, son of Charles, duke of Stiria, and grandson of the preceding, was born in 1578, elected king of Bohemia in 1617, king of Hungary in 1618, succeeded to the empire in 1619, and died in 1637, after having defeated his rebellious subjects in Bohemia, at the battle of Prague, and having been engaged in warfare with France and Sweden.

FERDINAND III, surnamed Ernest, was born in 1608, made king of Hungary in 1625, of Bohemia in 1627, succeeded his father in 1637, and died in 1657, after having brought the war between Sweden and the empire to a termination by the peace of Westphalia.

Kings of Castille and Leon.

FERDINAND, or Fernand, Gonzalez, first count of Castille, lived about 930.

FERDINAND, or Fernand I, surnamed the Great, second son of Sancho III, king of Navarre succeeded his father in his states, as heir to his mother, after having defeated and killed in battle Alphonso, of Leon; he caused himself to be crowned king of Leon and the Asturias in 1037. He then turned his arms against the Moors, from whom he took many of their towns, and after penetrating into the heart of Portugal, he finished a glorious reign of 40 years in 1065.

FERDINAND II, the youngest son of Alphonso VIII, had for his share the kingdoms of Leon and Galicia, whilst his eldest brother, Sancho II, succeeded to the throne of Castille. Ferdinand, at the death of the latter, usurped his throne, which, however, was regained by Alphonso IX. He died in 1188, or, according to some, in 1210, after a reign of 30 years, in which he was successful in his wars against Portugal.

FERDINAND III, surnamed St. son of Alphonso IX, re-united the crowns of Leon and Castille in 1226, and died in 1552. He was successful against the Moors, from whom he took Cordova, Murcia, Seville, Cadiz, &c.

FERDINAND IV, son of Sancho III, surnamed the Valiant, succeeded to the throne in 1295, and died in 1312, at the age of 27, after a reign of 17 years, during which he was engaged in war with the king of Granada, whom he defeated.

FERDINAND V, surnamed the Catholic, son of John II, king of Arragon, married Isabella of Castille, by which marriage he united the crowns of Castille and Arragon. By the conquest of Granada he drove the Moors out of Spain, where they had flourished for 800 years; and by the discoveries of Columbus, which were made under the auspices of Ferdinand and Isabella, they added a new world to their dominions. Ferdinand was no less successful against Portugal and Naples, and died in 1516. [Vide Plate II] Roder. Tolet.; Marian. Hist. d'Españ.; Guichardin. Hist. Neap.; Spondan. Contin. Baron. Annal.

FERDINAND VI, surnamed the Wise, son of Philip V and Mary of Savoy, succeeded his father in 1746, and died in 1759, at the age of 46. His reign was marked by peculiar wisdom and energy in the internal government of his country, which was thereby rendered prosperous.

Kings of Sicily and Naples.

FERDINAND, infanta of Castille, surnamed the Just, king of Arragon and Sicily, was crowned king of Sicily in 1412, and died in 1416. His effigy is given, as in the annexed figure; and the inscriptions on his coins are FERDINANDUS vel FER-RANDUS.

FERDINAND, Fernand, or Ferrand I, king of Naples and Sicily, and natural son of Alphonso V, king of Arragon, was legitimated by pope Eugene IV, begun to reign in 1458, and died in 1494, at the age of 70, after a reign of nearly 36 years, during which he lost his kingdoms twice, and twice regained them. His effigy is given, as in the annexed figure.

FERDINAND II, grandson of the preceding, and son of Alphonso, became sovereign of Naples in 1494; and died in 1496, not without disturbances during his short reign, occasioned by the French.

FERDINAND III, vide Ferdinand V, of Castille.

Other Princes of this Name.

FERDINAND, king of Portugal, was crowned after his father, Peter, in 1367, and was surnamed the Cruel. He died in 1383, at the age of 43.

FERDINAND of Portugal, duke of Viseu, and second son of king Edward and Elconore of Arragon, distinguished himself in Africa in 1464, and died in 1470.

FERDINAND I, grand duke of Tuscany, of the house of Medici, was the son of Cosmo I, who laid aside the cardinal's hat at the age of 52, to succeed his brother Francis in 1587, and died in 1609.

FERDINAND II, succeeded his father Cosmo II as grand duke of Tuscany in 1621, and died in 1670.

FERDINAND (Ecc.) of Talavera, archbishop of Grenada, was first confessor and afterwards counsellor to Ferdinand and Isabella, by whom he was consulted on their expedition against the Moors in Grenada. On the conquest of that province, he was translated from the bishopric of Avila to the see of Grenada, where he died in 1507, leaving behind him a character of peculiar sanctity.

FERDINAND of Arragon, archbishop of Saragossa, and grandson of Ferdinand, king of Arragon and Castille, was promoted to that see in 1539, and died in 1573, being then viceroy of Arragon. He wrote, among other things, 'La Historia de los Reyes de Aragon'; 'Catalogo de todos Prelados del Reyno de Aragon,' &c.; which were never printed in any distinct work.

FERDINAND (Biog.) of Cordova, a Spanish scholar of the 15th century, was the author of, 1. A Treatise addressed to Pope Sixtus IV, 'De Jure Beneficiorum vacantium medius Fructus Annatasque exigenti,' &c. 2. 'De Artificio omnis et investigandi et inveniendi Natura Scibilis.' 3. 'De Pontificii Pallii Mysterio.' 4. 'An sit licita Pax cum Saracenis Disquisitio,' &c.

FERDINAND, Lopez, vide Lopez.

FERDINANDI Epiphanius (Biog.) a physician of Mes-sagna, in the territory of Otranto, was born in 1569, and died in 1638, leaving, 1. 'Theoremata Medica et Philosophica,' Venet. 1611. 2. 'De Vita proroganda, seu Juventute conservanda et Senectute retardanda,' Neap. 1612. 3. 'Centum Historiæ, seu Observationes et Casus Medici,' Venet. 1621; and several times since reprinted in Holland and Germany. 4. 'Aureus de Peste Libellus,' Neapol. 1631.

FERDUSI (Biog.) a Persian poet, of the first rank of poets in that country, according to sir William Jones, who died in the year of the Hegira 411, A. D. 1021, wrote a number of Poems, which were collected and published under the title of 'Shâhnama.' Of Ferdusi's Satire against the Sultan Mahmud there is a translation in a 'Treatise on Oriental Poetry,' added to the Life of Nadir-Shah, in French.

FERENTINUM (Geog.) a town of the Hernici, at the east of Rome. The gentile name Ferentines, or Ferentini. Liv. l. 1; Sil. l. 8.

FERENTUM (Geog.) now Forenza, a town of Apulia.

Horat. l. 3, od. 4.

— Es artrum

Pingus tenent humilis Ferenti.

FERETRIUS (Myth.) an epithet of Jupiter, because he assisted the Romans ferendis spoliis, i. e. in bearing the spoils, because Romulus built a temple to Jupiter, whither he transported the best of the spoils, called opima, which were taken in battle.

Propert. l. 4, el. 10.

Nunc Jovis incipiam causas aperire Feretri.

Liv. l. 1; C. Nep. in Att. c. 20; Plut. in Rom.

FERG (Biog.) or Fergue, Francis Paul, an artist of Vienna, was born in 1689, and was found dead at his lodgings, apparently exhausted by cold, want, and misery, in 1740. He etched with aquafortis, and his prints are eagerly sought for by the curious.

FERGUS (Hist.) the name of three kings of Scotland.

FERGUS I, son of a king of Ireland, founded the kingdom of Scotland A. C. 332, and reigned 24 or 25 years, according to the Scotch historians. Buchanan, Leslie, &c.

FERGUS II, succeeded his grandfather, Eugenius, A. D. 411, and died after a reign of 16 or 18 years, during which time he gave great trouble to the Romans in Britain. The effigies of this and the following king are given, as in the annexed figures.

FERGUS III, son of Ethsinus, succeeded Eugenius VIII in 764, and was poisoned by his wife, after he had reigned three years. Boethius, Buchanan, &c.

FERGUSON (Her.) the name of a family of Londonderry, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1801 on sir Andrew Ferguson; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Azure, an arming buckle argent, between three boars' heads or, langued gules.

Crest. On a thistle, leaved and flowered proper, a bee or.

Motto. "Dulcis ex asperis."

FERGUSON, Robert (Biog.) a non-conformist preacher, was ejected from his living of Godmarham, in Kent, in 1662, and died in 1714, after having been implicated in the rebellion of Monmouth. He wrote, among other things, 'The Interest of Reason in Religion.'

FERGUSON, Robert, a poet of Edinburgh, was born in 1750, and died in 1774. His poems, which were for the most part published in the 'Weekly Magazine,' have since been collected in a volume, and often printed.

FERGUSON, James, an experimental philosopher, and native of Bamfshire, was born of very poor parents in 1710, and died in 1776, leaving, 1. 'Astronomical Tables and Precepts for calculating the True Times of New and Full Moons,' &c. 1763. 2. 'Tables and Tracts relative to several Arts and Sciences,' 1767. 3. 'An Easy Introduction to Astronomy,' &c. second edition, 1769. 4. 'Astronomy explained upon Sir Isaac Newton's Principles,' fifth edition, 1772; a new and improved edition has been lately published by Dr. Brewster. 5. 'Lectures on Select Subjects in Mechanics, Hydrostatics,' &c. fourth edition, 1772; a new edition by Dr. Brewster, in 2 vols. 8vo. 1805. 6. 'Select Mechanical Exercises, with a Short Account of the Life of the Author by Himself,' 1773. 7. 'The Art of Drawing in Perspective made Easy,' 1775. 8. 'An Introduction to Electricity,' 1775. 9. 'Two Letters to the Rev. J. Kennedy,' 1775, &c.

FERMAT, Peter (Biog.) a French mathematician, was born at Toulouse in 1590, and died in 1664. His mathematical works were published under the title of 'Varia Opera Mathematica,' 2 vols. fol. Tolos. 1679.

FERMO (Geog.) a town of Italy, and an archbishop's see, on the Gulf of Venice, 26 miles S. S. E. Ancona, 93 N. N. E. Rome. Lon. 13° 41' E. lat. 43° 10' N. This town suffered much in the 16th century, as we learn from Leander Alberti. Leand. Albert. Descript. Ital.

FERMOR, Richard (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was a merchant of immense wealth in the reign of Henry VIII; but being a zealous Romanist, he was found guilty of a premunire, for having afforded relief to the suffering Roman Catholics, and stripped of all his estates; but interest being made in his behalf, some part was restored to him by Edward VI, after which he died in 1552.

FERMOR, Sir George, his grandson, distinguished himself in arms under William, prince of Orange, and, for his services in the Netherlands, had the honour of knighthood conferred on him in 1586 by Robert, earl of Leicester. He gave a magnificent entertainment to king James and his queen in 1603, and died in 1612.

FERMOR, Sir William, Knt. or Bart., grandson of the preceding, took up arms in defence of his sovereign; and, notwithstanding his youth, he was honoured with the command of a troop of horse by Charles I, and made one of the Privy-Chamber to the prince, his son, whose fortunes he shared. He lived to see his royal master restored to his throne, but died the same year.

FERMOR, William, Count von, a Scotchman by birth and extraction, distinguished himself in the Russian service against the Turks, and afterwards defeated the king of Prussia at the battle of Zwendorf, when he took Berlin. He was made a count of the empire by Francis, and died in 1771, aged 64.

FERMOR (Her.) or Fermour, a family which, according to ancient records, also bore the name of Ricards. William Fermor, son of sir William, the loyalist above-mentioned, was created in 1692 baron of Lempster; and Thomas, second lord, was created in 1721 earl of Pomfret. [Vide Pomfret]

FERNANDEZ, Diego (Biog.) is known as the author of 'Historia del Peru,' fol. Sevilla, 1571.

FERNE, Henry (Ecc.) youngest son of sir John Ferne, the subject of the next article, was born at York in 1602, admitted commoner of St. Mary Hall, Oxford, in 1618; attended king Charles I, as his chaplain, during his troubles; was appointed master of Trinity College, Cambridge, at the Restoration; chosen vice chancellor of the University twice; consecrated bishop of Chester in 1661, and died five weeks after, leaving behind him a high character for learning, piety, and loyalty. He is said to have afforded some assistance to Walton in his Polyglott Bible; besides which he published, 1. 'The Resolving of Conscience,' &c. on the question of taking up arms against the king, printed at Cambridge in 1642, and Oxford in 1643, and two other tracts in answer to his opponents on the same subject. 2. 'Episcopacy and Presbytery considered,' Lond. 1647. 3. 'Certain Considerations of Present Concernment touching the reformed Church of England against Ant. Champney, Doctor of the Sorbonne,' ibid. 1653. 4. 'On the Case as it stands between the Church of England on the one hand, and those Congregations which have divided from it on the other,' ibid. 1655. 5. 'On the Division between the English and the Romish Church upon the Reformation,' ibid. 1655. 6. 'Answer to Mr. Spencer's Book, entitled 'Scripture mistaken,' 1660; besides several sermons.

FERNE, Sir John (Biog.) an English antiquary, of a good family in Lincolnshire, who died about 1610, was the author of 'The Blazon of Gentry, divided into two Parts,' &c. 4to.

FERNEL, John Francis (Biog.) or Fernelius, physician to Henry II of France, was born at Mont-Didier, in Picardy, in 1506, or as some say in 1497, and died in 1558, leaving, among his works, 1. 'Monosphaerium Partibus constans quatuor,' &c. Paris. 1526. 2. 'De Proportionibus Libri Duo,' ibid. 1528. 3. 'Cosmo-Theoria Libros duos complexa,' ibid. 1528. 4. 'De Naturali Parte Medicinæ Libri septem,' ibid. 1532. 5. 'De Vacuandi Ratione Liber,' ibid. 1545. 6. 'De Abditis Rerum Causis Libri duo,' ibid. 1538, which is said to have been reprinted 30 times since. 7. 'Medicina ad Henricum II,' &c. 1554, still oftener reprinted with some changes of the title. 8. 'Therapeutices universalis,' &c. Lugd. 1659. 9. 'Consiliorum medicinalium Liber,' Paris. 1582, many times reprinted. 10. 'Fehrium curandarum Methodus generalis,' Francof. 1577. 11. 'De Luis Veneræ Curatione perfectissima Liber,' Antv. 1579.

FERONIA (Myth.) a nymph of Campania, who was worshipped at Rome as a goddess of the woods and groves. Virg. Æn. l. 7, v. 697.

— Et viridi gaudens Feronia luo.

Horat. l. 1, sat. 5.

Ora manaque tuâ lavimus Feronia lymphâ.

The name is derived probably from the town of Feronia.

FERONIA (Geog.) a town of Etruria, now Pietra Santa, so called, as is said by some, from a temple of the goddess Feronia, although by others the name of the goddess is derived from that of the town. Varr. de Lat. Ling. l. 4; Lin. l. 22; Strab. l. 5.

FERRACINO, Bartolomeo (Biog.) a mechanic of Bassano, was born in 1692, and died soon after, completing a bridge over the Brenta in his native-place. A history of his Life and Inventions was published at Venice, 4to. 1764, by a writer of the name of Memo.

FERRAND, Louis (Biog.) a lawyer of Toulon, was born in 1645, and died in 1699, leaving many works on theological subjects, which engaged his attention more than that of law.

FERRANDUS (Biog.) surnamed Fulgentius, a disciple of St. Fulgentius, entered with too much zeal into a question which was at that time very improperly discussed; 'Whether it could be said that One of the Persons of the Trinity suffered on the Cross.' He died about the year 530, leaving many works that were highly esteemed by his contemporaries; the most considerable of which was an abridged Collection of Ecclesiastical Canons, &c.

FERRAR, Robert (Ecc.) bishop of St. David's, and one of the reformers, was born at Ilulifax, in Yorkshire, educated at Oxford, promoted to the see of St. David's in 1548, and burnt on a charge of heresy in 1555. His character has been differently represented by different writers, but he does not appear to have done honour to the cause for which he suffered.

FERRAR, Nicholas (Biog.) an enthusiast, the third son of Nicholas Ferrar, a merchant of London, was born in 1592, and died in 1637, after having attempted to found a religious house called the Arminian Nunnery; the principal members of which were his own family, who spent the most of their time in religious observances that subjected them very deservedly to obloquy and censure.

FERRARA (Geog.) a town of Italy, in the duchy of Ferrara, a province of the Ecclesiastical States, situated on a marshy plain near the Po, 40 miles S. E. Mantua, and 67 N. Bologna. Lon. 11° 36' E. lat. 44° 48' N.

History of Ferrara.

Ferrara, called in Latin Ferraria, was built about 433, fortified by Smaragdus, exarch of Ravenna, in 585, and passed afterwards from the kings of Lombardy to the see of Rome. It was taken by the French in 1796, retaken by the Austrians in 1799, but shortly after surrendered to the French. Murat's army was defeated here in 1815.

Ecclesiastical History of Ferrara.

Pope Vitalianus transferred the see of Vicovenza to Ferrara, where a council was held by pope Eugene IV.

FERRARD, Viscount (Her.) a title enjoyed by a family of the name of Foster, which is a branch of the family of De Burgh.

FERRARI Gaudenzio (Biog.) an artist of Valdugia, was born in 1484, and is supposed to have died in 1550. He was a competitor with Titian, in his 'Passion of Christ,' at the Grazie of Milano; and his 'Fall of Paul,' at the conventuals of Vercelli, may be compared with that of M. Angelo at the Paulina.

FERRARI, John Andrew, another artist, who was born at Genoa in 1599, and died in 1669, attained a high pitch of excellence not only in historical painting, but also in that of landscapes, fruit, animals, and flowers.

FERRARI, Lewis, inventor of the first method of resolving biquadratic equations, was born at Bologna about 1520, and died in 1565. His method was published by Cardan, who acknowledged its real author.

FERRARI, Octavian, an Italian author, was born at Milan in 1518, and died in 1586, leaving, 1. 'De Sermonibus Exotericis,' Venet. 1575; reprinted at Francfort in 1606, with a new dissertation 'De Disciplina encyclica,' under the general title of 'Clavis Philosophic Peripateticæ Aristotelicæ.' 2. 'De Origine Romanorum,' Mediol. 1607; and inserted by Grævius in the first volume of his Thesaurus. 3. A translation of Athenæus into Latin; besides some notes on Aristotle.

FERRARI, Francis Bernardine, of the same family with the former, was born at Milan about 1577, and died in 1669. He wrote, 1. 'De Antiquo Ecclesiasticarum Epistolarum Genere Libri tres,' Mediol. 1613. 2. 'De Ritu Sacrarum Ecclesiæ Catholice Concionum Libri tres,' Mediol. 1620; and Ultraj. 1692, by Grævius, with a preface. 3. 'De Veterum Acclamationibus et Plausu Libri septem,' Mediol. 1627; and likewise reprinted in the sixth volume of Grævius' Thesaurus.

FERRARI, Octavius, an antiquary of Milan, and of the same family as the two preceding, was born in 1607, and died in 1682. His works are, 1. 'De Re Vestiariâ Libri tres,' Patav. 1642, and 1654, to which last edition, four books more were added. 2. 'Analecta de Re Vestiariâ,' &c. Patav. 1670, and 1685, when it was subjoined to his book 'De Re Vestiariâ,' and both are inserted in the sixth and twelfth books of Grævius' Thesaurus. 3. 'Pallas Succica,' &c. 4. 'De Laudibus Francisci Putei.' 5. 'Prolusiones XXVI,' &c. which, with several other small pieces, were collected and disposed in proper order by John Fabricius, and published in 2 vols. 8vo. Helmst. 1710. 6. 'Veneta Sapientia, seu de optimo Civitatis Statu Prolusio.' 7. 'Electorum Libri duo.' 8. 'Origines Lingue Italice,' fol. Patav. 1676. Menage has written a book on the same subject, in which he corrects the errors of Ferrari. 9. 'De Pantomimis et Mimis Dissertatio.' 10. 'Dissertationes due, altera de Balneis, de Gladiatoribus altera.' These two last pieces were posthumous, and published by John Fabricius, the former at Wolfenbuttel, 8vo. 1714, and the latter at Helmstadt, 8vo. 1720.

FERRARIENSIS (Biog.) vide Sylvestre.

FERRARS, Sir Walter Devereux, Lord (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, [vide Devereux] distinguished himself as a steady adherent to the House of York, and was slain with Richard III at Bosworth Field, in 1485.

FERRARS, George (Hist.) a lawyer, historian, poet, and courtier, in the reigns of Henry VIII, Edward VI, Mary, and Elizabeth; was descended from an ancient family in Hertfordshire, born in a village near St. Alban's, about 1512, and died in 1564, being high in favour with Henry VIII.

He acted a considerable part in promoting the diversions of the court, particularly in the character of Lord of Misrule, or the Prince of Sports and Pastimes, during the Christmas holidays. His works as an author are, 1. 'A History of the Reign of Queen Mary,' which was inserted in the Chronicle, and published under the name of Richard Grafton. 2. Some pieces inserted in the well-known work entitled 'The Mirror for Magistrates,' the first edition of which was published in 1559, by William Baldwin. Among the contributions of Ferrars to this work, were 'The Fall of Robert Tresilian, Chief Justice of England,' &c.; 'The Tragedy, or unlawful murder of Thomas, of Woodstock, Duke of Gloucester;' 'The Tragedy of King Richard III;' 'The Story of Dame Eleanor Cobham, Duchess of Gloucester;' 'The Story of Humphrey Plantagenet, Duke of Gloucester, Protector of England;' and lastly, 'The Tragedy of Edmund, Duke of Somerset.' The arrest of this Ferrars, when he was member of Parliament for Plymouth in the reign of Henry VIII, created such confusion, that in the event it established the privilege of exemption from arrest, now enjoyed by members of Parliament.

FERRARS, Edward (Biog.) a Warwickshire gentleman, who died in 1564, wrote several Tragedies and Comedies, not now extant.

FERRARS, Henry, an antiquarian of the same county and family, was famous for his knowledge of heraldry, genealogies, and the like. He laid the foundation for Dugdale's 'Antiquities of Warwickshire Illustrated.' At the death of the latter, several of Ferrars' MSS. were deposited in the Ashmolean Museum.

FERRE, Vincent (Biog.) a Dominican of Valencia, in Spain, who died in 1682, composed many works on theological subjects, which appeared at Salamanca and Rome, in 8 vols. fol. 1675-1696.

FERREIN, Anthony (Biog.) an anatomist and surgeon, was born in 1693 at Frepich, in Agenois, and died in 1769. He was the author of two works, namely, 'Lectures sur la Médecine,' and 'Lectures sur la Matière Médica,' each in 3 vols. 12mo. which were published in 1783.

FERRERAS, Don Juan de (Biog.) a Spanish scholar of a noble family, was born at Labanexa in 1652, and died in 1735. He left several works on Theology, Philosophy, and History, the most important of which was his 'History of Spain,' which ends with the reign of Philip II.

FERRERS, Laurence, fourth Earl (Hist.) an intelligent nobleman of the illustrious family mentioned under Heraldry, had the misfortune to be afflicted with a constitutional insanity, in a fit of which he shot his land-steward Mr. Johnson. He was tried for this offence by his peers, found guilty, and sentenced to be hanged, which sentence was executed upon him in 1760, notwithstanding his solicitation to his Majesty that the punishment might be commuted for decapitation.

FERRERS, Earl (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the ancient and illustrious family of Shirley [vide Shirley], which with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Tiles. Shirley, earl Ferrers, viscount Tamworth, and a baronet. Title of the eldest son, viscount Tamworth.

Arms. Quarterly, 1st and 4th paly of six or and azure, a canton ermine. 2d and 3d France and England quarterly, with a border argent.

Crest. On a wreath, the bust of a Saracen, side-faced and couped proper, wreathed about the temples or and azure.

Supporters. Dexter a talbot ermine, eared gules, and gorged with a ducal collar or; sinister, a rein-deer of the second, attired and gorged with a ducal collar or, and charged on the shoulder with a horse-shoe argent.

Motto. "Honor virtutis premium."

FERRETI (Biog.) or Ferretus of Vicenza, a poet and historian in the 14th century, wrote a History of his own Times, from 1250 to 1318, in seven Books, which was inserted by Muratori, in the ninth volume of his collection of Italian Historians. He was likewise author of a Latin poem, and other works in prose and verse.

FERRERI, or Ferretti, Æmilius, in Latin Ferretus, a civilian in the 16th century, was born at Castello Franco, in Tuscany, in 1489, and died in 1552. He published an edition of the principal Orations of Cicero, 8vo. Lugd.; and his 'Opera Juridica,' were published in 4to. 1553 and 1598.

FERRERI, John Baptist, of Vincenza, a Benedictine monk, and an antiquary, published at Verona in 1672 'Musæ Lapidariæ,' fol.

FERRI, Paul (Biog.) in Latin Ferrius, a divine of a considerable family in Germany, was born at Metz in 1591, and died in 1669. He published, 1. 'Scholastici Orthodoxi Specimen,' 1616. 2. 'Vindiciæ pro Scholastico Orthodoxo,' Lugd. Bat. 1630. 3. 'General Catechisme de la Reformation,' besides collections for a History of Metz.

FERRI, Ciro, a painter and architect, descended from a good family at Rome, was born in 1634, and died in 1689. He was employed by pope Alexander VII, and his successors, and also by the grand duke of Florence, who assigned him a large pension to finish the ceilings begun by Cortona.

FERRIAR, John (Biog.) a physician, was born at Chester in 1764, and died in 1815, leaving 'Medical Histories,' &c. 3 vols. 8vo.; 'On the Medical Properties of the Digitalis Purpurea,' &c. In general literature, he published 'Illustrations of Sterne,' showing the sources whence this writer had drawn much of his matter; 'Bibliomania,' a poetical Epistle to Mr. Helder; 'An Essay towards a Theory of Apparitions,' besides several papers in the 'Manchester Memoirs.'

He wrote 'De Insignibus,' published in Germany in 1672; and also a Dissertation on the rare medal of Pylemon Evergetes, king of Paphlagonia, which was inserted by Gronovius, in his Thesaurus; besides some works on Law.

FESTUS, Portius (Bibl.) a governor of Judea, after Felix, whom the Jews solicited to condemn Paul, or to order him up to Jerusalem. The apostle's appeal to Cæsar frustrated the intentions both of Festus and the Jews. Act. xxiv. He is said to have been diligent in the suppression of robbery, and to have died A.D. 62. Joseph. de Bell. Judaic. l. 2.

FESTUS, Pompeius (Biog.) a grammarian, who abridged the work of Valerius Flaccus 'De Significatione Verborum.' The first edition, or Editio princeps of this work is without date, but supposed to have been printed in 1471; since which various editions have been published by Scaliger, Fulvius Ursinus, Aldus Minucius, and others; but the most complete is the Delphin edition, 4to. Paris, 1681, published by Ducier; or the reprint of it by Le Clerc, Amst. 1699; it is also among the 'Auctores Latine Linguae,' collected by Gottfredus, 4to. 1585, and afterwards reprinted with emendations and additions, Genev. 1622.

FETHERSTONHAUGH, Sir Timothy (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, a zealous royalist, raised a troop of horse at his own expense, and distinguished himself by his valour on several occasions, for which he was knighted in the field. He was taken prisoner at the fatal battle of Worcester in 1651, with James, seventh earl of Digby, and like him was beheaded at Bolton, in Lancaster.

FETHERSTONHAUGH (Her.) the name of a family of Fetherstonhaugh, co. Northumberland, of which mention is made as early as 1373. This family enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1774 on sir Matthew Fetherstonhaugh, a descendant of the eldest branch of this family, namely, of Timothy, mentioned above, the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Crest. A knight, denoting the ancient Macduff, armed at all points on a horse in full speed, in his dexter hand a sword erected, all proper, his surcoat argent; on his sinister arm a shield or, charged with a lion rampant gules, the vizor of his helmet shut, &c.
Supporters. Two savages, wreathed about the head and middle with laurel, holding branches of trees in their hands, all proper.
- FIFE, Lord, an English title conferred on James Duff, second earl of Fife, which at his death in 1809 became extinct.
- FIGERA (Geog.) the ancient Caphareus, a promontory of Negropont.
- FIGRELIUS, Edmundus (Biog.) a Swedish antiquary of Upsal, who died in 1676, published 'De Statuis illustrium Romanorum,' 8vo. 1656.
- FIGULUS, C. Marcius (Hist.) a consul with Nasica, U. C. 592, resigned his office from an informality in the election, and was re-elected six years after with Lentulus. Cic. Brut. c. 20.
- FIGULUS, a consul with L. Cæsar, U. C. 689.
- FIGULUS (Biog.) vide Nigidius.
- FILANGIERI, Gaetano (Biog.) or Cayetani, an Italian writer, descended from an illustrious family of Naples, was born there in 1752, and died in 1788, leaving, 1. 'Riflessioni politiche sull' ultima Legge Sovrana, che riguarda l'Amministrazione della giustizia,' 8vo. Naples, 1774. 2. 'Scienza della Legislazione,' the first two vols. Naples, 1780; the third and fourth in 1783; the fifth, sixth, and seventh, in 1785; and the eighth after his death, in 1789. This was reprinted at Naples, Venice, Florence, Milan, &c.; and translated into French, German, and Spanish. In 1806 sir Richard Clayton published a translation of Filangieri, in 2 vols. 8vo. as far as relates to political and economical laws.
- FILIFLFO (Biog.) vide Philephus.
- FILESAC, John (Biog.) a scholar, who was rector of the University of Paris in 1586, and died in 1638, was the author of several learned works, the principal of which are, 'De l'Autorité Sacrée des Evêques;' 'Du Careme;' 'De l'Origine des Paroisses,' &c.; which were collected and published under the title of 'Opera pleraque,' 3 vols. 4to. Paris, 1621.
- FILICAIA, Vincent de (Biog.) an Italian poet, of a noble family of Florence, was born in 1642, and died in 1707. His poems, which were much admired for their delicacy and noble sentiments, were published by his son, under the title of 'Poesie Toscane di Vincenzo da Filicaia,' &c. fol. 1707; the same, with the Latin prose, 3 vols. 12mo. Venet. 1747.
- FILIPPI, Bastiano (Biog.) an artist of Ferrara, was born in 1532, and died in 1602. He was happy in his imitation of Michael Angelo.
- FILMER (Her.) the name of a family, which was originally written Finnere, Fylmere, Filmour, and Filmor, and was seated, in the time of Edward III, at Finmore, in the county of Kent, where they possessed divers manors. This family enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1674 on sir Robert Filmer, in reward for his father's sufferings and loyalty; their arms, &c. are as follow:
Arms. Sable, three bars, and as many cinquefoils in chief or.
Crest. A falcon volant proper, beaked and legged or, mantled gules, doubled argent, standing on a broken castle or.
- FILMER, Sir Robert (Biog.) whose son was rewarded with a baronetcy for his loyalty, as above-mentioned, was born in 1604, and died in 1647. His works are, 1. 'The Anarchy of a Limited and Mixed Monarchy,' 1646, an answer to Hunton's 'Treatise on Monarchy,' printed in 1643. Sir Robert's work was reprinted in 1652, and 1679. 2. 'Patriarcha;' a work which we are told with much complacency has been answered by Mr. Locke. 3. 'The Freeholders' Grand Inquest,' &c.
- FIMBRIA, C. Flavius (Hist.) a Roman consul, U. C. 649, who opposed the designs of Sylla, but, seeing the success of his rival, and the desertion of his own troops, killed himself. Cic. de Offic. l. 3, c. 19; Liv. Epit. l. 82; Plut. in Lucull.
- FINÆUS, Orontius (Biog.) professor of mathematics in the Royal College at Paris, was born at Briançon, in Dauphiny, in 1494, and died in 1555, leaving many works, which were collected in 3 vols. fol. in 1532, 1542, and 1556; and an Italian edition, in 4to. Venice, 1587.
- FINCASTLE, Lord (Her.) the title borne by the eldest son of the earl of Dunmore.
- FINCH, Sir William, Knt. (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was knighted for his valour and conduct at the sieges of Terouenne, and Tournay; as also at the battle of the Spurs in 1513; and attended king Henry VIII in 1540 at his interview with the emperor Charles V, and afterwards at his interview with the French king and queen.

FINCH, Sir Thomas, Knt. second son of the preceding, was made one of the Knights of the Carpet the day after the coronation of queen Mary, for the share which he took in suppressing the insurrection of sir Thomas Wyatt; and being afterwards, in 5 Elizabeth, made Knight Marshal of the forces in Newhaven, then besieged by the French, he was shipwrecked in his passage over, and perished with all the rest on board, except seven of the meaner sort.

FINCH, Sir John, afterwards lord Finch, being bred to the law, rose through various gradations of office to be Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, but, having excited the virulence of the party which was at that time hatching the rebellion, he was also marked as an obnoxious person on account of his judgments in the affair of ship-money, and was therefore obliged to withdraw himself. He died in 1661, at the age of 70.

FINCH, Sir Heneage, vide Nottingham.

FINCH, the Right Hon. William, second son of Daniel, second earl of Nottingham, was sent as Envoy Extraordinary to the court of Sweden in 1724, and afterwards, in 1726, in the same character to the States General, with whose deputies he conferred on their accession to the Hanover treaty.

FINCH, the Hon. Edward Hatton, brother of the preceding, was sent as Envoy Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the king of Sweden, and also Minister Plenipotentiary to the Diet at Ratisbon in 1723, and Envoy and Plenipotentiary to the States General in 1724. He afterwards went to Poland and the czar of Muscovy in a similar character, and died in 1771.

FINCH (Her.) the name of a family which claims a common descent with that of Herbert, their ancestor, in the reign of Edward I, Herbert, alias Finch, having taken this latter name on his marriage with Finch's heir. Of this family were the Finches already mentioned under History, the first of whom that was ennobled was the Lord Keeper Finch, who, in 1640, was created lord Finch, of Fordwich, in Kent; but lady Finch, the widow of his uncle, sir Moyle Finch, knight and baronet, and only daughter of sir Thomas Heneage, knight, had been previously created, in 1623, viscountess of Maidstone, and in 1628 countess of Winchelsea. Heneage Finch, son and heir to sir Heneage Finch, fourth son of sir Moyle Finch, and the countess of Winchelsea, before-mentioned, was created in 1673 lord Finch, of Daventry, co. Northampton, and in 1681 earl of Nottingham. His son Daniel, second earl of Nottingham, became also sixth earl of Winchelsea on the death of John, fifth earl of Winchelsea, without issue [Vide Winchelsea]; and Heneage, his second son, was likewise raised to the peerage, by the title of baron Guernsey, in 1702, and earl of Aylesford in 1714.

FINCH, Anne, Countess of Winchelsea (Biog.) vide Winchelsea.

FINCH, Sir Henry, father to the Lord Keeper Finch, and son of sir Thomas Finch, of Eastwell, in Kent, was born in that county, educated at Oxford, bred to the law, and died in 1625. He wrote, 1. 'Nomotechnia, ou Description de Commun Ley d'Angleterre;' &c. fol. Lond. 1613; published by himself in English, under the title of 'Law, or a Discourse thereof,' 8vo. Lond. 1627, 1636, and 1661; but a better translation was undertaken in 1758 by an anonymous writer. 2. 'On the Calling of the Jews.'

FINET, Sir John (Hist.) the descendant of an Italian family of Sienna, who was employed as a negotiator by Charles I, and died in 1641, was the author of a book entitled, 'Fineti Philomenus; some choice Observations touching the Reception and Precedency, the Treatment and Audience, the Punctilios and Contests, of Foreign Ambassadors in England,' 8vo. 1666, published by James Howell. He also translated from the French into English, 'The Beginning, Continuance, and Decay of Estates,' &c. 1606.

FINGALL, Christopher, second Earl of (Hist.) was in the king's service during the rebellion in Ireland, and, after having been seven times indicted and outlawed, was taken prisoner at the battle of Rathmines, and died in the castle of Dublin in 1649.

FINGALL, Peter, fourth Earl of, was outlawed by the name of Luke, for his services to king James II; but the outlawry was afterwards taken off, and he died in 1717.

FINGALL, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the elder branch of the Plunket family [Vide Plunket]; which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Plunket, earl of Fingall, baron Killeen, of Killeen castle, co. Meath.

Arms. Sable, a bend, in the sinister chief a castle argent.

Crest. A horse passant argent.

Supporters. The dexter, a pegasus per fess or and argent; the sinister, an antelope argent, collared, chained, armed, and hooved, or.

Motto. "Festina lente."

FIONDA (Geog.) or Phronda, a ruinous city of Asia Minor, the ancient Phaselis, called by the Turks Tekrova, on the West coast of the Gulf of Satalia. It is still the see of a Greek bishop.

FIGGAVANTI, Leonard (Biog.) a physician of Bologna, who died in 1558, wrote many works, which went through several editions, as, 1. 'Del Specchio di Scienza universale,' Venice, 1564. 2. 'Regimento della Peste,' ibid. 1565. 3. 'Capricci medicinali,' ibid. 1568. 4. 'Il Tesoro della Vita humana,' ibid. 1570. 5. 'Compendio de' Secreti naturali,' Turin, 1580, Venice, 1581, &c. 6. 'Della Fisica divisa in Libri quattro,' Venice, 1582. 7. 'Chirurgia,' ibid. 1588.

FIRENZUOLA, Angelo (Biog.) a poet, whose family name was Nanni, so called from his native city, Firenze, or Florence, died in 1545. His works in prose were published in 8vo. at Florence in 1548, and his poetry in 8vo. in 1549. These were published, together with his translation of the Golden Ass of Apuleius, in 4 vols. 8vo. Florence, 1765, 1766.

FIRMICUS, Maternus Julius (Biog.) an ancient Christian writer in the reign of Constantius and Constans, was the author of a work entitled, 'De Erroribus Profanarum Religionum;' which was published separately, in 8vo. Argentorat. 1562; Heidelb. 1599; Paris. 1610; and was afterwards printed with Minucius Felix, 8vo. Amstel. 1645; Lugd. Bat. 1652; and again edited by James Gronovius in 1709. It is likewise inserted in the 'Bibliotheca Patrum;' and also at the end of Cyprian, Paris, 1666.

FIRMILIAN, St. (Ecc.) a bishop of Caesarea, in Cappadocia, who died at Tarsus in 269, on his way to the second council of Antioch, where Paul of Samosata was condemned. He was the friend of Origen, and also took the part of St. Cyprian against pope Stephen on the question of re-baptizing heretics, the necessity of which he maintained. Euseb. l. 6; Cyprian. Epist.; S. Basil. de Spir. Sanct.

FIRMIN (Ecc.) a confessor and martyr, who was bishop of Amiens in the third century, but of whom no authentic particulars are known.

FIRMIN, St. bishop of Uzès, was descended from the Ferreols, an illustrious house in France. He assisted at the fourth and fifth councils of Orleans, and at the second council of Paris, and died in 553.

FIRMIUS, Catus (Hist.) a Roman senator, who was condemned to be banished on a charge of high treason, was afterwards pardoned by Tiberius, in consideration of his past services. Tac. l. 2, c. 17.

FIRMIUS, or Firmus, a native of Seleucia, who caused himself to be proclaimed emperor in Egypt, was conquered and slain by Aurelian. Vopisc. in Firm.

FIRMIUS, a usurper in the age of Valentinian, sen. who set up his standard in Mauritania, but was conquered by Theodosius the Great, from whom he obtained pardon. He afterwards engaged in a fresh revolt, but, being taken prisoner, he killed himself. Marcellin. l. 29; Oros. l. 7.

FIRMIUS (Numis.) some few medals of this usurper are extant bearing his effigy, as in the annexed figure: inscription, ΑΥΤ Κ. Μ. ΦΙΡΜΙΟC ΕΥC. ΕΥΤ. CΕΒ. A medal is given by Goltzius, inscribed, DN. FIRMIUS P. F. AUG. which he assigns to the usurper of that name.

FIRMUM (Geog.) now Fermo, a town of Picenum, on the Adriatic, the birth-place of Lactantius. Its port was called Castellum Firmianum. Cic. ad Attic. l. 8, ep. 12; Liv. l. 27; Strab. l. 5; Mcl. l. 2; Val. Max. l. 8; Tell. Pat. l. 1; Plin. l. 3; Ptol. l. 3, c. 1; Anton. Itin.; Procop. Goth. Rer. l. 2; Alberti, Cluverius, &c.

FIRMUS (Ecc.) archbishop of Caesarea, in Cappadocia, at the commencement of the fifth century, subscribed to the council of Ephesus in 431, and was one of the prelates who opposed the heresy of Nestorius. He died in 439. Some letters of this prelate were printed by Muratori, in his Anecdota Græca, 4to. Patav. 1709. Socrat. Hist.

FISCHER, John Andrew (Biog.) a physician of Erfurt, was born in 1667, and died in 1729, leaving, 1. Consilia Medica, quæ in Usum practicum et Forensæ pro Scopo curandi et renunciandi adornata sunt, 3 vols. Francof. 1704, 1712. 2. Ilías in Nuce, &c. &c.

FISCHER, John Christian, a composer for, and performer on, the hautbois, was a native of Fribourg, and died in 1600. His performances excited great admiration in his day.

FISH, Simon (Biog.) a reformer, and a native of Kent, was educated at Oxford, and died in 1531. He was the author of 'The Supplication of Beggars'; a paltry satire on the Romish clergy. Tanner also ascribes to him two works, called, 'The Boke of Merchants, rightly necessary to all Folks, newly made by the Lord Pantapole'; and 'The Spiritual Nosegay'; besides which he published, 'The Summ. of the Scriptures', translated from the Dutch.

FISHACRE (Biog.) or Fizacre, Richard, a Dominican, and native of Exeter, who died in 1248, and was interred among the Dominicans at Oxford, was the author of many theological works, some of which may yet be found in public libraries. He was the friend of Robert Bacon, and was highly esteemed in his day.

FISHER, John (Ecc.) bishop of Rochester, and a great benefactor to learning, was born at Beverley, in Yorkshire, in 1459, admitted in Michael House, Cambridge, which has since been incorporated into Trinity College, and took the degrees in Arts in 1488, and 1491. He was afterwards elected fellow of his House; chosen proctor of the University in 1495; and in the same year master of Michael House. In 1501 he took his degree of D. D. and was chosen chancellor of the University; in 1502 appointed the lady Margaret's first divinity professor; and in 1504 made bishop of Rochester, from which he would never be translated. On the breaking out of the reformation he was a zealous opponent to the new doctrine, particularly to the king's supremacy, the oath of which he refused to take, and was accordingly tried on a charge of high treason, convicted, and sentenced to be beheaded; which sentence, to the disgrace of the age, and the Protestant religion, was executed upon him in 1535, at the age of 77. It was by the counsel of this prelate that Margaret, countess of Richmond, mother of Henry VII., undertook the magnificent foundations of St. John's and Christ's Colleges, at Cambridge, and established the divinity professorships in both Universities, together with many other acts of generosity for the promotion of learning and piety. He was the author of several works, as, 1. 'Assertionum Martini Lutheri Confutatio'. 2. 'Defensio Assertionis Henrici octavi de septem Sacramentis', &c. 3. 'Epistola responsoria Epistolæ Lutheri'. 4. 'Sacerdotii Defensio contra Lutherum'. 5. 'Pro Damnatione Lutheri'. 6. 'De Veritate Corporis et Sanguinis Christi in Eucharista adversus Ecolampadium'. 7. 'De Unica Magdalena'. 8. 'Petrum fuisse Romæ'. 9. His 'Opinion of King Henry VIII's Marriage, in a Letter to T. Wolsey', printed in the Collection of Records at the end of the second volume of Collier's Ecclesiastical History; besides Funeral Sermons and Tracts. His principal works were collected and printed together in one volume, fol. Wurtzb. 1595. [Vide Plate XX]

FISHER, John (Biog.) a Jesuit of the 17th century, whose real name was Piercy, was a native of Yorkshire, and a great disputant in the reigns of James I and Charles I. He held several conferences on the subjects of religion with some noted divines of the English church, as Laud, White, bishop of Norwich, Featly, and others; and published, 1. 'A Treatise of Faith', Lond. 1600, and St. Omers, 1614. 2. 'A Defence of the preceding against Wooten and White', St. Omers, 1612. 3. 'A Challenge to Protestants to show the Succession of their Pastors from Christ down'. 4. 'An Answer to Nine Points of Controversy proposed by King James I, with the Censure of Mr. White's Reply', 4to. 1625; to which there are many replies, from White, Featly, and anonymous writers.

FISHER, Payne (Biog.) or, as he styled himself in Latin, Paganus Piscator; a Latin poet, was born at Warrford, in Dorsetshire, in 1616; educated at Oxford; and, after a desultory life, in which he fought for Charles I, and wrote for Oliver Cromwell, as his poet laureate, he died in 1693. Among his numerous works, of which Wood has given a list, he wrote, 1. 'Marston Moore, sive de Obsidione Prælioque Eboracensi Carmen', 4to. Lond. 1650. 2. 'Irenodia gratulatoria', in honour of Cromwell, and dedicated to Bradshaw, 4to. ibid. 1652. 3. 'Oratio anniversaria', in honour of the inauguration of Cromwell, &c. 4. 'Threnodia triumphans', &c. on the death of Cromwell, fol. 1658, Latin and English. 5. 'Epicion vel Eulogium Feliciss. Sereniss. Fortiss. Ludovici XIV', &c. fol. without date or place; besides which he wrote a book of Heraldry, printed at London in 1682.

FISHER, Edward, supposed by Wood to be the son of sir Edward Fisher, of Mickleton, in Gloucestershire, knt., was educated at Oxford in 1627, and died in Ireland, but at what time is not known. He published, 1. 'An Appeal to thy Conscience', 4to. Oxford, 1644. 2. 'The Marrow of Modern Divinity', 8vo. 1646. 3. 'A Christian Caveat to the Old and New Sabbatarians, or a Vindication of our Old Gospel Festival', &c. Lond. 4to. 1650, which was reprinted three times afterwards, and answered by one Giles Collier. 4. 'An Answer to Sixteen Queries touching the Rise and Observation of Christmas', &c. printed with the Christian Caveat, in 1655, &c.

FISHERWICK, Lord (Her.) an English title enjoyed by the earl of Donegal and Chichester. [Vide Donegal.]

FITZGEFFREY, Charles (Biog.) a poet in the reign of Elizabeth, of a good family in Cornwall, was born in 1575, educated at Oxford, and died in 1676, leaving, 1. 'The Life and Death of Sir Francis Drake', in verse. 2. 'Afsania, sive Epigrammata', l. 3, et Cenotaphia, l. 1, 8vo. Oxon. 1601. 3. 'A Curse for Corne-Holders', a prose tract, 4to. 1631. 4. 'The Blessed Birth-Day', a religious poem. Wood also ascribed to him a collection of poetry, entitled 'Choice Flowers and Descriptions', which is said to belong to Allot.

FITZGERALD, Maurice (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, went into Ireland in 1168 to assist Dermoid Mac-Murrough, king of Leinster, to recover his kingdom, from which he had been expelled by Roderic, king of Connaught, and was engaged in all the battles that were fought there until the arrival of Henry II in that country, who received the submission of their chiefs. In recompence for his services, Richard Strongbow, earl of Pembroke, under whom he acted, granted him divers lands in Leinster.

FITZGERALD, Maurice, second Lord Offaley, was appointed, in 1329, Lord Chief Justice of Ireland, which office he filled at two different times; and, after having reduced the rebellious chiefs to submission, he died in 1257 in the habit of St. Francis, for whose order he had founded a monastery.

FITZGERALD, John Fitz-Thomas, vide Kildare.

FITZGERALD (Her.) the name of a very ancient family, which derives its origin from Otho, or Other, a rich and powerful lord in the time of Alfred, descended from the dukes of Tuscany, who, from Florence, or Norway, passed to Hetruria, in Normandy, and thence to England, where, and in Wales, they flourished until Richard Strongbow, earl of Pembroke, their kinsman, engaged them to take part in his expedition to Ireland, in which Maurice Fitzgerald, as before-mentioned, embarked, and was one of the special conquerors of that kingdom. Gerald, his son, was styled baron of Offaley. John Fitzgerald, the eighth lord Offaley, was created earl of Kildare in 1316; and James, the twentieth earl of Kildare, was created in 1746 a peer of Great Britain, by the title of viscount Leinster, of Taplow, co. Buckingham; in 1761, he was advanced to the dignity of marquis of Kildare and earl of Offaley, and in 1766 he was further created duke of Leinster. [Vide Leinster] Maurice Fitzgerald, brother of John above-mentioned, was in 1329 created earl of Desmond, which title became extinct in that family at the death of James, the 17th earl of Desmond.

FITZGERALD, the name of a family of Lisheen, co. Tipperary, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1801 on sir Thomas Fitzgerald; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth ermine, a saltire gules; second and third argent, a chevron gules, between three boars' heads sable, langued gules.

Crest. A chevalier in complete armour on horseback at full speed, with his sword drawn, and his beaver up.

FITZGIBBON (Her.) the name of an Irish family, which enjoys the peerage of both England and Ireland, conferred on John Fitzgibbon, Lord Chancellor of Ireland, who was created a peer in 1789, by the title of baron Fitzgibbon, of Lower Connello; to which dignity was added in 1793 the title of viscount Fitzgibbon, in 1795 that of earl of Clare, and in 1799 the English barony of Fitzgibbon, of Sidbury, co. Devon.

FITZGIBBON, Viscount, the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Clare.

FITZHARRIS, Viscount (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Malmsbury.

FITZHERBERT, Sir Anthony (Hist.) a distinguished lawyer in the reign of Henry VIII, and a descendant of the ancient family of Fitzherberts mentioned under Heraldry, was born at Norbury, co. Devon; and, after having duly qualified himself for his profession at Oxford, and at one of the inns of court, he rose in 1523 to the post of Justice of the Common Pleas, which he honourably filled until his death in 1538. It deserves to be recorded of him that he warmly opposed the iniquitous spoliation which was then going forward by the alienation of the church lands. His name is held dear by lawyers, as the author of many valuable works; as, 1. 'The Grand Abridgment,' &c.; the best edition of which is said to be that of Pynson, fol. 1516, with additions to the first part, under the title of 'Residuum;' but Ames mentions an edition printed by Wynken de Worde in 1516, and dates that of Pynson in 1514. To the edition of 1577 is added, by William Rastall, a most useful and accurate table.

VOL. I.

2. 'The Office and Authority of Justices of Peace compiled and extracted out of the Old Books, as well of the Common Law as of the Statutes,' 1538, and often reprinted, the last edition in 1617. 3. 'The Office of Sheriffs, Bailiffs of Liberties, Escheators, Constables, Corbours,' &c. 1538. These works are written partly in French, and partly in English. 4. 'Of the Diversity of Courts,' in French, but translated afterwards by W. H. of Gray's Inn, and added by him to 'Horne's Mirrour of Justices.' 5. 'The New Natura Brevium,' 1534, in French, but since translated. An edition was published in 1794 in 2 vols. 8vo. having the addition of a Commentary supposed to be written by Lord Chief Justice Hale. It was also collated with other editions, and enriched with notes. 6. 'Of the Surveying of Lands,' 1539. 7. 'The Book of Husbandry, very Profitable and Necessary for all Persons,' 1534, and reprinted several times after in the reigns of Mary and Elisabeth.

FITZHERBERT (Her.) the name of two families; namely, of Norbury, and of Somersall-Herbert and Tissington, in Derbyshire, where they can be traced as early as the origin of surnames. They are said to have been of the same stock as the ancient baronial house of Fitzherbert, of whom Herbert Fitzherbert was Lord Chamberlain to king Stephen, and was Lord of the Forest of Dene, in Gloucestershire. From this Lord Chamberlain's family descended, in all probability, sir William Fitzherbert, of Tissington, whose fifth son Alayne Fitzherbert, was created in 1790 an Irish peer, with the title of baron St. Helens; and in 1801 an English peer, with the title of baron St. Helens, of the Isle of Wight. [Vide St. Helens]

FITZHERBERT, the elder branch of the same family as the preceding, which enjoys the title and dignity of a baronet, conferred in 1784 on sir William Fitzherbert, eldest brother of lord St. Helens. Their arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Gules, three lions rampant or.

Crest. An armed arm erect, couped and vested ermine, cuffed argent.

FITZHERBERT, Thomas (Biog.) grandson of sir Anthony Fitzherbert, the judge before-mentioned, was born in the county of Stafford in 1552, educated at Oxford, and died in 1640. He wrote several controversial works in defence of popery; but those which are most known are, 1. 'Treatise concerning Polity and Religion,' 4to. Douay, 1606, wherein are confuted several principles of Machiavel; a second part was printed at Douay in 1610; and both together in 4to. 1652. 2. 'An sit Utilitas in Scelere, vel de Infelicitate Principis Machiavellani,' 8vo. Rom. 1610.

FITZHERBERT, Nicholas, also grandson to sir Anthony Fitzherbert, and cousin to Thomas, the preceding, was born about 1550, and educated at Oxford, but soon after left his country for the sake of his religion, and was unfortunately drowned in 1612 in a journey he made from Rome. He published, 1. 'Case Galatei de Bonis Moribus,' 1595, a translation from the Italian. 2. 'Oxonienis in Anglia Academicæ Descriptio,' 1602. 3. 'De Antiquitate et Continuatione Catholicæ Religionis in Anglia, 1608. 4. 'Vite Cardinalis Alani Epitome,' 1608, all printed at Rome.

FITZHERBERT, Sir William, Bart. of Tissington, mentioned under Heraldry, was born in 1748, educated at Oxford, and died in 1791. He was the author of two small tracts, entitled, 1. 'Maxima.' 2. 'A Dialogue on the Revenue Laws.' A third pamphlet is ascribed to him, 'On the Knights made in 1778.'

FITZ-HUGH, Henry, third Lord (Hist.) was advanced to the office of Constable of England at the coronation of Henry V, who, going to Jerusalem, fought with the Saracens and Turks. By the help of the knights of Rhodes, he built a castle there called St. Peter's Castle, and died in 1424.

FITZ-HUGH, Lord (Her.) a title conferred in 1328 on Henry Fitz-Hugh, which, at the death of George, seventh lord Fitz-Hugh, became dormant.

FITZ-JAMES (Hist.) vide Berwick.

FITZ-JAMES, Richard (Ecc.) bishop of Rochester, Chichester, and London, and a distinguished benefactor to Merton College, was a native of Somersetshire. About 1459 he went to Oxford, was elected probationer fellow of Merton College in 1465, and warden of the same in 1482. In 1495 he was made almoner to Henry VII, in 1469 consecrated bishop of Rochester, in 1503 translated to the see of Chichester, in 1504 to that of London, and died in 1522. He contributed to the completion of St. Mary's church, Oxford; and, in conjunction with his brother sir John Fitz-James, Lord Chief Justice of England, he founded the school at Bruton, in Somersetshire.

FITZPATRICK (Her.) the family name of the earl of Upper Ossory, who is said to be descended from Heremon son of Milesius, king of Spain, and the first Irish monarch of the Milesian race. Of this family was Bryan Bernard, or Barnaby Macgill Patrick, or Fitzpatrick, chief of Upper Ossory, living in the reigns of Henry VII and VIII, from whom the title is derived that is now enjoyed by the family. Richard Fitzpatrick, second son of John Fitzpatrick, of Castletown, esq. who was the second son of Florence, the third baron of Upper Ossory, was created in 1715 baron Gowran, of Gowran. His son John was in 1751 created earl of Upper Ossory; and his son John, the second earl, was made a peer of England in 1794 by the title of lord Upper Ossory, in England, which titles became extinct in 1818.

FITZROY (Her.) the family name of the duke of Richmond in the reign of Henry VIII, when Henry Fitzroy, his natural son by lady Tailbois, was created duke of Richmond. The title became extinct at his death in 1536.

FITZROY, the family name of the duke of Grafton, and also of lord Southampton, a descendant of the same family. [Vide Grafton, &c.]

FITZSIMONS, Henry (Hist.) a Jesuit, was born in Dublin in 1569, educated at Oxford; but leaving the Protestant religion, entered among the Jesuits, and died in 1644, after suffering much on account of the active part which he took in the rebellion that raged at that time. He published, 1. 'A Catholic Confutation of Mr. John Rider's Claim of Antiquities,' &c.; to which is annexed 'An Answer to certain Complains of Afflicted Catholics for Religion,' 1608. 2. 'A Justification and Exposition of the Mass,' 4to. 1611. 3. 'Britannomachia Ministrorum in plerisque, et Fidei Fundamentis, et Fidei Articulis dissidentium,' 4to. Duac. 1644. 4. 'A Catalogue of the Irish Saints,' 8vo. Antwerp, 1621.

FITZSTEPHEN, William (Biog.) a monk of Canterbury, and an English historian, who is supposed to have died in 1182, was much attached to Thomas à Becket, and was present at his murder, continuing with him after he was deserted by his other attendants. He wrote a 'Description of the City of London,' which was noticed by Leland, and translated by Stowe, in his 'Survey of London;' and has since been more correctly translated by Dr. Pegge, and published in 4to. 1772, with a Preliminary Dissertation and Notes.

FITZWALTER, Robert (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was at the head of the army of barons who exacted the charter from king John, at Runnymede. His daughter Maud had been the object of king John's attachment, who had in vain endeavoured to gain her as his mistress.

FITZWALTER, Walter, his grandson, was one of the most expert soldiers in the realm. He died in 10 Rich. II.

FITZWALTER, Walter, Lord, was beheaded in 1 Henry VII, as an adherent of Perkin Warbeck.

FITZWALTER (Her.) the name of a family, of which mention has already been made under History. The first who bore this name was Robert, the son of Walter, whose father Robert, was the fifth son of Richard de Tunbridge, son of Gilbert, earl of Brian. From this Robert descended the lords Fitzwalter, the first of whom, mentioned by that title, was Walter, lord Fitzwalter above-mentioned. His honours were restored to his son, who in 17 Henry VIII was created viscount Fitzwalter and earl of Sussex; but this earldom expired at the death of Edward Radcliff, the sixth earl, in 1641. The barony of Fitzwalter was afterwards claimed by sir Henry Mildmay, a descendant in the female line, from the Fitzwalters, and allowed to his brother Benjamin, his heir, in 1669. His son Charles, lord Fitzwalter, was created in 1730 viscount Harwich, and earl Fitzwalter, which titles became extinct at his death in 1756.

FITZWILLIAM, Sir William (Hist.) cousin to Edward the Confessor, being ambassador at the court of William, duke of Normandy, attended him in his victorious expedition into England, as marshal of his army, in 1066; and for his bravery at the battle of Hastings the king gave him a scarf from his own arm.

FITZWILLIAM, William, Earl of Southampton, vide Southampton.

FITZWILLIAM, Sir William, of Milton, in Northamptonshire, and of Gainsparke, in Essex, was sheriff in 1506; and having been for some time in the service of cardinal Wolsey, he afterwards entertained him at his house, at Milton, when the latter was in disgrace. For this he was called to account by the king; but, on the assurance that he had done it solely out of gratitude for past services, the king took it so well as to knight him on the spot. He was of a charitable and bountiful temper, and died in 1534, leaving many memorials of his liberality.

FITZWILLIAM, Sir William, eldest son of sir William, and grandson of the preceding, was so high in the confidence of queen Elizabeth, that he was appointed five times Lord Deputy of Ireland; and, in addition to other high offices of trust, he was constituted Constable of Fotheringay Castle, during the imprisonment of queen Mary, whom he treated with so much civility, that the morning before she was beheaded she presented him with the portrait of her son, James I, which picture is yet in the family.

FITZWILLIAM, third brother of the preceding, was employed against the rebel O'Neill, whom he defeated in 1567. His elder brother, Bryan, was also in the same service.

FITZWILLIAM (Her.) the family name of the earl Fitzwilliam, whose high descent has already been mentioned under History. The first of this family raised to the peerage was William Fitzwilliam, the admiral, who in 1537 was created earl of Southampton; which title became extinct at his death in 1542. From sir William Fitzwilliam, an elder branch of the same family, descended the Fitzwilliams of Milton, and Greens Norton, of whom was William Fitzwilliam, esq. who in 1620 was created lord Fitzwilliam, of Lifford, alias Lifford, co. Donegal, in the kingdom of Ireland. William, the third lord Fitzwilliam, was in 1716 created earl Fitzwilliam; and William, the third earl Fitzwilliam, of Ireland, was in 1742 created a peer of Great Britain, by the name, style, and title of lord Fitzwilliam, baron of Milton, co. Northampton; and in 1746 was created a viscount and earl of Great Britain. The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Fitzwilliam, earl Fitzwilliam, viscount Milton, and lord Fitzwilliam, baron of Milton in England; also earl Fitzwilliam, viscount Milton, and baron Fitzwilliam, of Lifford in Ireland. Title of the eldest son viscount Milton.

Arms. Lozenge argent and gules.

Crest. In a ducal coronet or, a triple plume of ostrich feathers argent.

Supporters. Two savage men, wreathed about their heads and waists with oak leaves, and in their exterior hands a tree eradicated, the top broken off, all proper.

Motto. "Appetitus rationi pareat."

FITZWILLIAM, Hugh (Biog.) fourth son of John, lord of Sprotborough and Hadlessey, went into Italy in 1554; but returning afterwards to England, he drew up in 1565 Memoirs of his Family, collected from the Records in the Tower, the Exchequer, the Rolls, and Herald's Office; the MS. of which is still in the custody of the family, and has furnished materials for the genealogist and historian.

FIXLMILNER, Placidus (Biog.) a German theologian and astronomer, and native of Austria, was born in 1721, and died in 1791, leaving, 1. 'Reipublicæ Sacre Origines Divinæ,' 1760. 2. 'Meridianus Speculæ Astron. Cremisaniensis,' 1765. 3. 'Decennium Astronomicum,' 1776; besides a fourth work, which appeared after his death, containing a Collection of Observations, made between 1776 and 1791; and also a number of articles in the 'Journal des Scavans.'

FIZACRE (Biog.) vide Fishacre.

FIZES, Anthony (Biog.) a physician of Montpellier, was born in 1690, and died in 1765. His works, consisting principally of Essays on Medical Subjects, were collected in one quarto volume, Montpel. 1742.

FLACCILLA (Hist.) vide Flacilla.

FLACCUS, L. Valerius (Hist.) a consul with M. Porcius Cato, U. C. 558, A. C. 194, triumphed over the Galli Insubres. Liv. 1. 34.

FLACCUS, L. Valerius, a consul, who marched against Sylla, and was assassinated by his colleague Fimbria. Liv. Epist. 1. 10; Plut. in Syll.

FLACCUS, a governor of Syria after Vitellius, who was an enemy to Agrippa, the grandson of Herod the Great. Joseph. Antiq. 1. 18.

FLACCUS, Valerius, a poet, and cotemporary with Martial, who died about A. D. 93, at the age of 30, was the author of a poem, entitled, 'Argonautica,' in imitation of the Greek work of Apollonius on the Argonautic expedition. The best editions of Flaccus are that of Heinsius, 12mo. Amstel. 1680; and that cum notis integris variorum et Petri Burmanni. John Baptista Pius, an Italian poet, completed the eighth book of the 'Argonautica,' and added two more by way of supplement, partly from Apollonius, which was printed at the end of Flaccus, in Aldus's edition of 1523.

FLACIUS (Biog.) vide Franconius.

FLACILLA (Hist.) or Flaccilla Ælia, an empress, and the first wife of Theodosius the Great, was a native of Spain, and distinguished for her piety and Christian virtues. She was the mother of Arcadius and Honorius, and died A. D. 385.

FLACILLA (Numis.) medals are extant of this empress, bearing her effigy on the obverse, as in the annexed figure, inscriptions, AEL. FLACCILLA AUG.—CAEL. FLACCILLA AUG.—AEL. FLACCILLA.—DN. AELIA FLACCILLA AUG.; on the reverse, SALUS REIPUBLICAE. Strad. Imp.; Du Cange Byz. Fam.; Band. Imp. Rom. Mediob. &c.

FLAHERTY (Biog.) or O'Flaherty, Roderic, an Irish scholar, was born in 1630, at Moycullin, co. Galway, the ancient estate of his family, which became forfeited by the rebellion in 1641. He was the author of an account of Ireland, entitled 'Ogygia, sive Rerum Hibernicarum Chronologia,' &c. 4to. Lond. 1685. He wrote also a Vindication of his 'Ogygia,' against the objections of sir George Mackenzie and others.

FLAMEEL (Biog.) or Flamael, Bertholet, an historical painter of Liege, was born in 1614, and died in 1675. He was employed by the grand duke of Florence, for whom he executed several pieces.

FLAMEL, Nicholas (Biog.) a supposed alchemist, to whom were attributed the works, entitled, 'A Philosophical Summary,' in verse, 1561; and a treatise 'On the Transformation of Metals,' in 1621; but, as appears, without foundation. An account of him may be found in the 'Essais sur

Paris,' by M. St. Foix; and also in the 'Hermippus Redivivus,' Lond. 1749, second edit.; and in the 'Varieties of Literature,' 8vo. 1795.

FLAMININUS (Hist.) vide Flaminius.

FLAMINIO (Biog.) or Flaminio, John Anthony, a scholar of Italy, whose family name was Zarrubini, died in 1536, leaving many works, among which, the most important are his twelve books of Letters, which were published under the title of 'Antonii Flaminii Foro-Corneliensis Epistolæ familiares nunc primum editæ,' &c. 8vo. Bonon. 1744. His works were published with those of his son, the subject of the following article.

FLAMINIO, or Flaminio, Marc Anthony, a Latin poet, son of the preceding, was born at Serevalle in 1498, and died in 1550. His Poems, which place him in the first rank of Latin poets, are, for the most part, to be found in the 'Carmina quinque illustrium Poetarum,' 8vo. Florent. 1549; besides which he wrote, 1. 'M. Ant. Flaminii in Librum Psalmorum brevis Explanatio,' 8vo. Venet. 1545. 2. 'Epistolæ aliquot de Veritate Doctrinæ cruditiæ et Sanctitate Religionis,' &c. 8vo. Norib. 1571. An edition of his Poems was also published, under the title of 'M. A. Flaminii Carmina sacra quæ extant omnia, hoc Modo nunquam hactenus Editæ,' &c. 8vo. Rostoch. 1578; also an edition of his works, with those of his father, by Mancurti, which was reprinted in 1743.

FLAMINIUS, C. (Hist.) a consul, was led to engage rashly with Annibal, at the lake of Thrasymene, and was killed A. C. 217, with an immense number of the Romans. Polyb. 1. 3; Liv. 1. 22; Cic. de Inv. 1. 2; Val. Max. 1. 1; Flor. 1. 2.

FLAMINIUS, or Flaminio, T. Q. a Roman consul U. C. 356, A. C. 198, signalized himself by his successes and his valour against Philip, king of Macedonia, from whose power he relieved the Grecian states; and rendered himself illustrious. He was afterwards sent on an embassy to Prusias, king of Bithynia, with whom Annibal had taken refuge, and by his prudence he hastened the death of the Carthaginian hero, who had been so long the terror of the Romans. Flaminio was found dead in his bed, after a life spent in the attainment of glory. Cic. de Senect. c. 12; Liv. 1. 34; Flor. 1. 2; Plut. in Vit.; Aurel. Vict. de Vir. Illust.; Eutrop. 1. 4, &c.

FLAMINIUS, Lucius, brother of the preceding, after signalizing himself in Greece, was expelled from the senate by Cato, on account of his debaucheries. Cic. Cat. c. 12; Liv. 1. 39, &c.

FLAMINIUS, L. Q. son of the preceding, was consul with Q. Metellus, U. C. 604, A. C. 150; and again U. C. 631. Liv. 1. 35, &c.

FLAMINIUS (Biog.) surnamed Nobilis, a theological critic of Lucca, superintended the printing of the Bible, which was executed under the auspices of Sixtus V; and in this edition he used the Latin version which preceded the Vulgate.

FLAMSTEAD, John (Biog.) an English astronomer, of reputable parents at Denby, in Derbyshire, was born in 1646, and died in 1719, leaving 'Historia Coelestis Britannica,' 3 vols. fol. 1725; a less perfect edition of which had been previously printed in one volume, folio, 1712. [Vide Plate XXXV]

FLATMAN, Thomas (Biog.) an English poet, was born in London about 1633, and died in 1688. A third edition of his Poems, with additions and amendments, was published by himself, with his portrait, in 1682.

FLAVEL, John (Biog.) a nonconformist minister, and native of Worcestershire, was born about 1627; educated at Oxford; ejected for nonconformity in 1662; and after exposing himself to much inconvenience in order to carry his point of preaching at his own pleasure, he died in 1691, leaving a good character among persons of his own persuasion. His works were published in 2 vols. fol. after his death; and since frequently reprinted in 6 vols. 8vo.

FLAVIANUS (Ecc.) a patriarch of Antioch, and a man of an illustrious family, who, by his prudence, terminated the schism, which had existed for some time, in behalf of Paulinus, and died in 404, after governing the church 23 years, during which time he displayed great zeal and wisdom in opposing the Arians. S. I. Chrysostom. Hom.; Sozom. Hist. Eccles. l. 7; Theodoret. l. 5; Baron. Annal.

FLAVIANUS, another patriarch of Antioch, who succeeded Palladius in 496, was banished in 512 by the emperor Anastasius, on account of the zeal with which he defended the council of Chalcedon. Evang. l. 3; Baron. Annal. &c.

FLAVIANUS, a patriarch of Constantinople, was elected after Proclus in 447, and declared himself a decided enemy to the heretic Eutyches, who sprung up at that time, and succeeded in calling together a synod at Ephesus in 449, called 'Latronium Ephesinum,' or 'Conventus Latronum,' i. e. The Assembly of Robbers; at the head of which was Dioscurus, bishop of Alexandria. They not only deposed Flavianus, but maltreated him in such a manner that he died three days after. S. Leo, ep. 8; Niceph. l. 14, c. 47; Evang. l. 1; Concil. Chalced.; Menolog. Græc.

FLAVIANUS, a priest, who, by his intrigues, got himself elected patriarch of Constantinople in 489; but his artifices were soon detected, and he would have been deposed if he had not been removed by death. Evang. l. 3; Nicephor. l. 16; Baron. Annal. ann. 488.

FLAVIGNI, Valerian de (Biog.) a doctor of the Sorbonne, and a native of Laon, who died in 1674, wrote against Abraham Echellensis in his 'Epistolæ de Heptaplis Parisiensibus,' 4to. Tornac. 1668.

FLECHIER, Esprit (Ecc.) bishop of Nismes, was born at Perne, near Avignon, in Provence, promoted to the see of Lavaur in 1685, translated two years after to that of Nismes, and died in 1710. His works as an author are, 1. 'Œuvres mêlées,' 12mo. in prose and verse, both French and Latin. 2. An edition of Gratian, 'De Casibus illustrium Virorum. 3. 'Panegyriques, &c. des Saints,' &c. His works were collected and printed in 9 vols. 8vo. 1782.

FLECKNOE, Richard (Biog.) a poet and dramatic writer, who died in 1678, was the author of 'Damoiselles à la Mode,' a comedy; 'Ermin and the Chaste Lady,' &c. &c.

FLEETWOOD, Charles (Hist.) son of sir William Fleetwood, knt. and cup-bearer to James I and Charles I, engaged in the rebellion, notwithstanding his connexions, and, after having acted his part in promoting the fall of the monarchy, and the usurpation of his father-in-law, Cromwell, he was by him set over Ireland in 1652; but at the death of the latter he headed the party which deposed Richard, and would fain have made his peace with the king at the Restoration, but, being deterred by fear, he was one of the persons excepted out of the general act of pardon and indemnity, to suffer such pains, penalties, and forfeitures, not extending to life, as should be inflicted on them by an act to be made for that purpose. He died in obscurity soon after the revolution. [Vide Plate XVIII]

FLEETWOOD, William (Ecc.) an English prelate, was born in the Tower of London in 1656, educated at Eton, and King's College, Cambridge, chosen chaplain to king William, nominated to the see of St. Asaph in 1706, translated to Ely in 1714, and died in 1723. He wrote, 1. 'Inscriptionum Antiquarum Sylloge,' &c. 8vo. 1691. 2. A translation of 'Jurieu's Plain Method of Christian Devotion,' &c.; the 27th edition of which was printed in 1750. 3. 'An Essay upon Miracles,' &c. 8vo. 1701. 4. 'The Reasonable Communicant; or an Explanation of the Doctrine of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper,' 1702, and several times reprinted, is inserted in the catalogue of tracts distributed by the 'Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.' 5. 'Sixteen Practical Discourses,' &c. 1705. 6. 'Chronicon Preciosum; or an Account of the English Money,' &c. a second edition of which appeared in 1726. 7. 'The Thirtieth Chapter to the Romans vindicated from the Abuses put upon it,' &c.; a party tract, which does not add to his credit, either as a scholar or a divine. 8. 'The Judgment of the Church of England in the case of Lay-Baptism,' &c. 8vo. 1712. 9. 'The Life and Miracles of St. Wenfride, together with her Litanies,' &c. 10. 'The Counsellor's Plea for the Divorce of Sir G. D. and Mrs. T.' 1715. 11. 'Papists not excluded from the Throne upon the account of Religion,' &c. 1717. 12. 'A Letter from Mr. T. Burdett, who was executed at Tyburn for the Murder of Captain Falkner, to some Attorney's Clerks of his acquaintance, written six Days before his Execution,' 1717. 13. 'A Defence of Praying before Sermon, as directed by the 55th Canon.'

FLEETWOOD, William (Biog.) an English lawyer, and recorder of London, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, was the natural son of Robert Fleetwood, esq. of the county of Lancaster, educated at Oxford, entered of the Middle Temple, and, after having followed his profession with honour and advantage to himself, he died in 1594. His works as an author are, 1. 'An Oration made at Guildhall before the Mayor, &c. concerning the late Attempts of the Queen's Majestie's seditious Subjects, Oct. 15, 1571,' 12mo. 2. 'Annalium tam Regum Edwardi V, Ricardi III, et Henrici VII, quam Henrici VIII, Titulorum Ordine Alphabetico multo jam melius quam ante Digestorum Elenchus,' 1579, and 1597. 3. 'A Table to the Reports of Edmund Plowden,' in French. 4. 'The Office of a Justice of Peace,' &c. 8vo. 1658. 5. A short copy of Latin Verses prefixed to sir Thomas Chaloner's 'Rep. Anglorum Instauranda.' 6. Notes upon Lambard's 'Archæologia.'

FLEMING (Her.) the name of a family which derives its descent from sir Michael le Fleming, knt. who, being related to Baldwin, earl of Flanders, was sent to assist William the Conqueror, his son-in-law. He was afterwards employed by the Conqueror to oppose the Scots, and obtained for his services a grant of the castle of Gileston and other estates

Cambridge, sent as an ambassador to Russia in 1588, and died in 1610, leaving, among his works as an author, 1. 'Of the Russe Commonwealth; or Manner of Government by the Russe Emperor, commonly called the Emperor of Moskovia,' &c. 8vo. 1590; and reprinted 12mo. in 1623; and inserted in Hackluyt's 'Navigations,' &c. Vol. I. 2. 'A Discourse concerning the Tartars,' &c.

FLETCHER, Richard (Ecc.) an English prelate, and father of the dramatist, was a native, as is supposed, of Kent, educated at Cambridge, promoted in 1589 to the see of Bristol, translated in 1592 to that of Worcester, and soon after to that of London, and died in 1596, after having incurred the serious displeasure of the queen for marrying a second time, in consequence of which he was suspended from his bishopric. While prebend of Sutton Longa, in the church of Lincoln, he was appointed to attend upon the execution of Mary, queen of Scots, and displayed more zeal than discretion in attempting to turn her mind on the score of religion.

FLETCHER (Hist.) the name of a family of Clea Hall, in Cumberland, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1782 on sir Henry Fl. Fletcher; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

FLETCHER, John (Biog.) a dramatic writer, and son of bishop Fletcher, was born about 1576, in Northamptonshire, and died of the plague in London in 1625. He is well known as the companion of Beaumont, in the composition of those works which go under their joint names. The first edition of all their plays, amounting to upwards of 50, was published in 1672 in folio, reprinted in 1711, in 7 vols. 8vo.; in 1751 in 10 vols. 8vo.; and again by Colman also in 10 vols. in 1778. [Vide Plate XXXI]

FLETCHER, Giles, eldest son of Giles Fletcher, and cousin of the poet, was born about 1588, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1623. His only production was 'Christ's Victory and Triumph in Heaven and Earth over and after Death,' 4to. Cambridge, 1610, 1640, and in 1783, with Phineas, his brother's 'Purple Island.'

FLETCHER, Phineas, younger brother of the preceding, was educated at Cambridge, and died about 1650, leaving, 1. 'Purple Island, or the Isle of Man,' a poem. 2. 'Piscatory Eclogues.' 3. 'Miscellanies,' 4to. Cambridge, 1693.

FLETCHER, Andrew, of Sallom, a Scotch politician, who got the name of patriot in his day by his busy opposition to the government. He was born in 1653, educated by bishop Burnet, and died in 1716, after having been obliged to leave his country more than once, on account of his violent proceedings. He published in 1698 'A Discourse of Government with relation to Militias,' also 'Two Discourses concerning the Affairs of Scotland.' His publications, and some of his speeches, were collected in one volume entitled 'The Political Works of Andrew Fletcher, Esquire,' and his Life has since been published by the earl of Buchan, with a high panegyric on his political virtues.

FLETCHER, Abraham, a mathematician, and son of a tobacco-pipe manufacturer, was born at Bridgekirk, in Cumberland, in 1714, and died in 1793, leaving the 'Universal Measurer,' 8vo. 1762, as proof of his industry and natural genius, which overcame all the obstacles of his education and condition in life.

FLO

History of Florence.

Florence, called in the Latin Florentia, has experienced great changes in its government, and has been subject to different masters. Its history was for some time blended with that of Rome, and the first particular mention made of this city is on the occasion of its instituting a festival day in the year 408, to commemorate the great overthrow given by Stilicho, the general of the emperor Honorius, to the Goths in the Fesulane mountains, near Florence, by which this city was delivered from the barbarians. The Goths, however, recruiting their strength, appeared again in 814, in the territory of Florence, which they depopulated, and held in subjection under their king, Alaric, and his successors, until they were in their turn driven out by the Huns, under Attila, whose irruption into Italy was succeeded by that of the Vandals, and other barbarians. Florence, in common with the other states of Italy, was obliged to submit to the emperor Charlemagne, and remained subject to the emperors of Germany till the time of Rudolphus, from whom they purchased their independence. They were then governed by magistrates of their own, at first called consuls, afterwards ancients, and finally priors; but in the 15th century they fell under the power of the house of Medici, the emperor Charles V having made Alexander de Medici the first grand duke, in 1530, but it still retained its republican form of government in other respects. The Florentines were from an early period cultivators of the arts, sciences, and learning, as their University testifies, which was erected as early as 1438; and the well-known Medicean Gallery, which contains a grand collection of works of art; also the Academia Fiorentina, erected in 1542; and the Academia Della Crusca. Florence was likewise the birth-place of Dante, Machiavel, Americus Vespucius, &c. In 1799, the French troops, who were then masters of it, were driven out by the inhabitants, but the city afterwards shared the fate of all Tuscany, until the fall of Bonaparte.

Ecclesiastical History of Florence.

This city was erected into the seat of an archbishop in 1421. A general council was held here in 1439, at which the pope Eugene IV himself was present, with John Palologus, emperor of the Greeks, and several prelates of his nation, when a union between the Greek and Latin churches was agreed upon. Other councils were also held here; as in 1055, when pope Victor II and the emperor Henry III met to put down the usurpations of church property, and the heresies of Berenger; also in 1105, 1517, 1573, 1589, 1617, and 1654, provincial councils or synods were held for purposes of church discipline. *P. 'Clave Historial,' which answers to the French work entitled 'L'Art de verifier les Dates.' 3. 'Medallas de las Colonias Municipios, y pueblos antiguos de Espana,' 2 vols. 4to. Madrid, 1757—1758, to which the author added a third volume, published after his death.

FLORIAN, John Peter Claris de (Biog.) a French writer, was born in 1755, at the Chateau de Florian, in the province of Languedoc, and died in 1794. Florian's works consist of short Dramas, Novels, and Pastorals, as his 'Galathee,' 'Theatre,' 'Le bon Menage,' 'Le bon Pere,' and 'Guillaume Tell,' 'Numa Pompilius,' &c. many of which have been made familiar to the English reader by translations. His 'Fables,' have been much admired in France, and are esteemed the best since the days of Fontaine.

FLORIANUS, Marcus Annus (Hist.) half brother of the emperor Tacitus, seized the empire at the death of the latter, A. D. 276; but was successfully opposed by Probus; and, finding his rival the object of general choice, he is said to have put an end to himself by opening his veins, after a reign of a few months. Vopisc. in Florian.

FLORIANUS (Numis.) medals are extant of this prince, bearing his effigy, as in the annexed figure; inscriptions IMP. FLORIANUS AUG.—IMP. C. FLORIANUS AUG. vel PIUS FELIX. AUG.—IMP. C. M. ANN. FLORIANUS AUG.

FLORIDA (Geog.) a country of N. America, situated between the 25th and 31st degrees of N. lat. and the 80th and 91st degrees of W. lon. It is said to have been discovered by Sebastian Cabot in the year 1496, some time before it became known to the Spaniards, from whom it received its present name, John Ponce, a native of Spain, having sailed from Porto Rico in 1513, and landed here in April, when the fields appeared in full bloom. Its conquest, after various unsuccessful attempts, was at length accomplished by the Spaniards in 1539; but the possession of this territory was subsequently disputed by the French and English until 1763, when it was ceded to Great Britain in exchange for the Havannah, which had been taken from the Spaniards in the course of the war. It was recovered by Spain in 1781, and confirmed to her in 1783; but attempts have since been made by the Americans to get possession of this country, which, after its division by the British into East and West Florida, has been known by the name of the Floridas.

FLORIO, John (Biog.) who styled himself the Resolute, was descended from the Florii of Sienna, in Tuscany. His parents, who were of the sect of the Waldensis, had fled to England, where he lived, and died in 1625, aged 80. He wrote, 1. 'First Fruits which yield familiar Speech, merry Proverbs, witty Sentences, and golden Sayings,' 4to. 1578, and 8vo. 1591. 2. 'Perfect Introduction to the Italian and English Tongues,' printed with the former, and dedicated to the earl of Leicester. 3. 'Second Fruits to be gathered off Twelve Trees,' &c. 8vo. 1591. 4. 'Garden of Recreation yielding six thousand Proverbs,' printed with the former. 5. 'Dictionary Italian and English,' fol. 1597; reprinted in 1611 under the title of 'Queen Anna's New World of Words,' and again in 1659, with considerable additions by Giovan. Torrino. 6. 'The Essays of Montaigne,' fol. 1603, 1618, 1632.*

FLORIO, Francis an historical painter of Antwerp, was born in 1520, and died in 1570. His style of painting was so superior as to acquire for him the honourable appellation of the "Raphael of Flanders."

FLORUS, Julius (Hist.) a friend of Horace, to whom the poet has addressed two epistles. He accompanied Claudius Nero in his military expedition.

FLORUS, Gessius, a governor of Judaea, A. D. 54, whose oppressions and cruelties forced the Jews into a rebellion. Joseph. Ant. l. 20.

FLORUS, Lucius Annaeus (Biog.) an historian of the same family as Seneca and Lucan, flourished about A. D. 116. He wrote an Abridgment of the Roman History; the best editions of which are that of Duker, 2 vols. 8vo. Lugd. Bat. 1722 and 1744; and that of Fred. Fischer, 8vo. Lips. 1760. *Spartian; Lactan. Inst. FORSTER, John Reinhold, a naturalist, was born at Dirchaw, in Polish Prussia, in 1729, and died in 1799. His principal work, on Botany, entitled 'Characteres generum Plantarum,' &c. was written in conjunction with his son; besides which he published his 'History of Voyages and Discoveries in the North,' and some other things connected with natural history.

FORSTER, George, son of the preceding, was born in 1754, and died in 1792, at the age of 30, after having accompanied his father in his voyage round the world, and assisted him in his literary labours. He also wrote some small pieces himself, and was concerned for some time with professor Lichtenberg in the publication of the Gottingen Magazine.

FÖRSTNER, Christopher (Biog.) a lawyer of Austria, was born in 1598, and died in 1667, leaving, 1. 'Hymnæmata politica,' 8vo. 1623. 2. 'De Principatu Tiberii,' &c. 3. A Collection of his Letters on the Peace of Munster.

FORSYTH, William (Biog.) an horticulturist of Old Meldrum, in the county of Aberdeen, was born in 1737, and died in 1804, leaving, 1. 'Observations on the Diseases, Defects, and Injuries of fruit and forest Trees,' 1791. 2. 'A Treatise on the Culture and Management of Fruit Trees,' 4to. 1802.

FORT, Francis le (Hist.) a native of Geneva, and an officer in the Russian army under Peter I, displayed such abilities at the siege of Azof, and elsewhere, that he was made commander of the emperor's forces, and afterwards prime minister, which latter post he filled with great honour to himself, and benefit to the nation, and died in 1699.

FORTE, Sir Richard le (Hist.) the founder of the Fortescue family [vide Fortescue], and a distinguished soldier in the army of William the Conqueror, contributed very materially to the decisive victory gained at Hastings by the valour which he displayed on that occasion, having three horses killed under him.

FORTESCUE, Sir John, Knt. son of the preceding, and of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was also a distinguished commander at the battle of Hastings; for which he was rewarded with a grant of many lands in the county of Devon.

FORTESCUE, Sir John, Knt. a descendant of the above-mentioned sir Richard, was one of the heroes who signalised themselves in the service of Henry V during his wars in France. He received the honour of knighthood upon the reduction of Meaux, the capital of La Brie, in 1422, of which he was made governor and captain.

FORTESCUE, Sir John, the distinguished lawyer, and second son of sir John above-mentioned, was educated in Lincoln's Inn, called to the degree of Serjeant at Law in 1430, constituted King's Serjeant in 1441, made Lord Chief Justice of England the next year; and, being a particular favourite with Henry VI, was by him promoted to the post of Lord Chancellor. He shared in the misfortunes of his royal master, and was obliged for some time to live in exile; but the house of Lancaster being unable to retrieve their fortunes, Fortescue made his peace with Edward IV, and spent, as is supposed, the remainder of his days in retirement. His works, which have contributed to give his name considerable celebrity, are, 1. 'De Laudibus Legum Angliæ,' written for the benefit of prince Edward, who was afterwards murdered; and first published, in the reign of Henry VIII, by Edward Whitchurch, in 16mo. but without a date; in 1516 it was translated by Robert Mulcaster, and printed by R. Tottel, and again in 1598, 1599, and 1609. Fortescue with Hengham's 'Summa,' was published likewise in 12mo. 1616, 1660, and again with Selden's notes in 1672. The original was printed in fol. 1737; and, lastly, with an English translation, and illustrated with the notes of Selden, 8vo. 1775; to which were added large historical notes by F. Gregor, esq. 2. 'The Difference between an Absolute and Limited Monarchy as it more particularly regards the English Constitution,' faithfully transcribed from the MS. copy in the Bodleian library, collated with three other copies, and published with some remarks by John Fortescue Aland, of the Inner Temple, esq. F. R. S. 8vo. 1714, and again in 1719. The remaining works of this author were never published; but some of them are still preserved in libraries, and are known by their titles; as, 1. 'Opusculum de Natura Legis Naturæ et de ejus Censura in Successione Regnorum supremorum.' 2. 'Defensio Juris Domus Lancastriæ.' 3. 'Genealogy of the House of Lancaster.' 4. 'Of the Title of the House of York.' 5. 'Genealogiæ Regum Scotiæ.' 6. 'A Dialogue between Understanding and Faith.' 7. 'A Prayer Book which savours much of the times we live in.' The Lord Chancellor is said also to have drawn up the statute 28 Henry VI, 'Of Resumption of certain Grants of the Crown,' which is, however, not extant in any present edition of the statutes. He also wrote an apology for his conduct in making his peace with Edward IV, which was never published, but was seen by Mr. Selden, as he himself informs us in his preface to Fortescue's book, 'De Laudibus.'

FORTESCUE, Sir John, vide Aland.

FORTESCUE (Her.) the name of the family, of which honourable mention has already been made under History, is derived from forte 'scutum,' because sir Richard le Forte above-mentioned bore a strong shield before William the Conqueror at the battle of Hastings; whence the word scutum, or écu, was added by the family to their original name, as also their motto, "Forte Scutum Salus Ducum." The first of this family who obtained the peerage was sir John Fortescue Aland [vide Aland], who was created in 1746 lord Fortescue, of Credan, in Ireland. This title became extinct at the death of his son Dormer, the second lord Fortescue; but Hugh Fortescue, esq. a descendant of an elder branch of the same family, was created a peer of England in 1746 by the title of lord Fortescue, baron of Castle-hill, co. Devon, and earl of Clinton. The earldom of Clinton became extinct at his death; but Hugh, the third lord Fortescue, was in 1789 advanced to the dignities of a viscount and earl. The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Fortescue, earl of Fortescue, viscount Ebrington, lord Fortescue, and baron of Castle-hill.

Arms. Azure, a bend engrailed argent, cotized or.

Crest. On a wreath a plain shield argent.

Supporters. Two greyhounds argent, each having a ducal collar and line gules.

Motto. "Forte Scutum Salus Ducum."

FORTIFIOCCA, Thomas (Biog.) an Italian writer of the 14th century, wrote a history of the conspiracy of Gabrini, in the vernacular Roman tongue of that time, which was printed in 1694.

FORTIGUERRA, Nicholas (Ecc.) a cardinal, and bishop of Theano, descended from an illustrious family of Pistoia, in Tuscany, was promoted to the see of Theano by Pius II, created a cardinal in 1460, and died in 1473, after having been employed in important missions by the popes Eugene IV, Nicholas V, and Pius II.

FORTUNA (Myth.) a goddess, more particularly honoured by the Romans under the names of Fortuna bona, mala femina, virilis, constans, inconstans, primigenia, redux, publica, parva, salutaris, &c. Tullus Hostilius first built a temple to her, but her most famous temple was at Antium, whither offerings and presents were sent from all parts of Italy. Some mention is made in Homer of a nymph named Ῥόνη, whom he makes to be daughter of Oceanus; and Pindar makes her to be one of the Parce. Hom. Hymn. in Cerer.; Pind. apud Paus. l. 7; Cic. de Div. l. 2; Horat. l. 1, od. 35; Dionys. Hal. l. 4; Liv. l. 10; Val. Max. l. 1; Vitruv. l. 3; Ovid. Fast. l. 6; Lucan. l. 2; Sil. Ital. l. 8; Strab. l. 1; Lactant. Inst. Div. l. 3.

FORTUNA (Numis.) this goddess was generally represented with a rudder in her hands, and a cornucopia, to denote her government of human affairs, and that she bestows plenty. She is represented in fig. 1, restraining a horse, to denote Fortuna manens; but in some medals, or statues, she is furnished with wings, to denote her inconstancy, and in others she has a wheel in her hands; and on one statue she is depicted, as in fig. 3, with a babe in her arms, as the patroness of foundling children, and is thus denominated, Fortuna rumalia, or, suckling of children; from ruma, a breast. Many medals are inscribed with her peculiar epithets, as, FORTUNA MANENS. — FORTUNA BONA. — FORTUNA OBSEQUENS. — FORTUNA REDUX. — FORTUNA MULIEBRIS, &c. Vaill. Pr. t. ii.; Tristan. Comment. Hist.; Mediobarbus, &c.

FORTUNATÆ Insulæ (Geog.) or Canariæ, islands at the West of Mauritania, in the Atlantic, supposed to be the Canary Isles of the moderns. Horat. l. 4, od. 8; Strab. l. 1; Plin. l. 6; Plut. in Sertor.

FORTUNATUS (Bibl.) a disciple mentioned by St. Paul. 1. Cor. xvi. There is a Fortunatus mentioned by St. Clement, who may be the same.

FORUM, Appii (Bibl.) the town mentioned under Geography, is also referred to under the same name in Acts xxviii.

FOWLER, Edward (Ecc.) an English prelate, was born at Westerleigh, in Gloucestershire, in 1622; educated at Oxford; and at the revolution got promoted to the see of Gloucester, where he died in 1732. He mingled much in the controversies of the day, and wrote, 1. 'The Principles and Practices of certain moderate Fines of the Church of England, abusively called Latitudinarians,' &c. 8vo. 1670. 2. 'The Design of Christianity,' &c. 8vo. 1671; which being attacked by John Bunyan he disgraced himself by a coarse reply, entitled 'Dust ped out, or a manifest discovery of the gross ignorance, error, and wicked spirit, one John Bunyan, Lay-prophet, in Bedford,' &c. 4to. 1672. 3. 'Libertas Evangelica,' &c. 8vo. 1680. 4. Several pieces against popery, as 'The Resolution of this case of Conscience, whether the Church of England's symbolizing, so far as it doth with the Church of Rome, makes it lawful to hold communion with the Church of Rome,' 4to. 1683; 'A defence of the Resolution,' &c. 5. 'Two Pieces on the Doctrine of the Trinity,' &c. 4to. 1694.

FOWLER, John (Biog.) an English printer, was born at Bristol; educated at Winchester school; admitted of New College, Oxford, in 1555; and died in 1579; after having rendered essential service to the Romish church by printing their books against protestant writers. He published, 1. 'Loca Communia Theologica,' a compendium of the 'Summa Theologiae,' of Thomas Aquinas. 2. 'Additiones in Chronica Genebrardi.' 3. 'A Psalter for Catholics,' which was answered by Sampson, dean of Christ Church, Oxford, 1578; besides some epigrams and poems, and a translation from Latin into English of 'The Epistle of Osorius,' and the 'Oration of Pet. Frarin against the unlawful Insurrection of the Protestants, under the pretence to reform religion,' Antwerp, 1566; this was answered by William Fulke, divinity professor at Cambridge.

FOWLER, Christopher, a nonconformist, was born at Marlborough, in Wiltshire; educated at Oxford; joined the presbyterians at the breaking out of the rebellion; was ejected for nonconformity, after the restoration; and died in 1676; leaving, 1. 'Demonium meridianum,' or Satan at noon, &c. 4to. Lond. 1655. 2. 'Demonium meridianum,' &c. a second part, 1656.

FOWLER, Thomas, a physician, was born at York in 1736, and died in 1801, leaving, 1. 'Medical Reports on the effects of Tobacco,' 1785. 2. 'Medical Reports on the effects of Arsenic,' 1786. 3. 'Medical Reports on the acute and chronic rheumatism,' 1798; besides several contributions of his to the Medical Commentaries and Annals of Medicine, edited by Dr. Duncan, Edinburgh.

FOX, Richard, (Ecc.) an English prelate, and founder of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, was the son of Thomas Fox, and was born at Ropesley, near Grantham, in Lincolnshire, about the latter end of the reign of Henry VI. He was promoted to the see of Exeter, and appointed Keeper of the Privy Seal in 1487, translated successively to the sees of Bath and Wells, Winchester and Durham, and died in 1528, after having employed the greater part of his public life in the service of Henry VII, by whom he was sent on almost every mission of any importance into France, Germany, and Scotland. Although he was supplanted in the favour of Henry VIII by cardinal Wolsey, yet he retained his seat in the Privy Council, and made his appearance in Parliament a few years before his death, when he was totally blind. [Vide Plate XII]

Fox, Edward, almoner to king Henry VIII, and bishop of Hereford, was born at Dursley, in Gloucestershire, and after passing through Eton was admitted of King's College, Cambridge, of which he was elected provost in 1528; was sent ambassador to Rome with Stephen Gardiner, afterwards bishop of Winchester, on the subject of Henry's divorce; was afterwards employed in embassies both in England and Germany; and being promoted in 1535 to the see of Hereford, he exerted himself strenuously to promote the reformation, and died in 1538. He wrote 'De vera Differentia regie Potestatis et Ecclesiasticæ,' &c. 1534 and 1538, which was translated into English by Henry, lord Stafford; besides annotations on Mantuan, the poet; and a letter from him respecting their proceedings at Cambridge, when sent to obtain the opinion of the university on the king's divorce.

Fox, John, Esq. of the family mentioned under Heraldry, took up arms for Charles I, and afterwards fought at the battle of Worcester in 1651, in the service of Charles II, whom he served after the restoration as Clerk of the Acutry to his household.

Fox, Sir Stephen, younger brother of the preceding, distinguished himself no less by his talent than by his fidelity to his royal masters, Charles I and II, during their troubles; and after the restoration was high in the confidence, not only of Charles II, but of his successors James II and William III, by whom he was constituted one of the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, and continued in the several changes of that reign until he retired from public business in 1701. His last act as a statesman was to lead queen Anne, by her majesty's particular desire, as she went in procession in 1702; but he survived this transaction some years, and died in 1716. He performed many acts of munificence, as that of building the church at Farley at his own expense; building and founding an hospital there for six old men and six old women; likewise building a church at Culford, in Suffolk; pewing the body of the cathedral church of Sarum, &c.; but his most noble benefaction was that of 13,000*l.* towards the erection of Chelsea-Hospital, the design of which was first projected by him.

Fox, Charles, the eldest surviving son of the preceding, was early engaged in public business, being employed as Paymaster-General of the forces, &c. in the reigns of Charles II, James II, William III, and queen Anne. He died in 1719, in the 54th year of his age.

Fox, Stephen, vide Ilchester.

Fox, Henry, vide Holland.

Fox, Charles James, second surviving son of the first lord Holland, was born in 1748, and died in 1806, after having rendered his name celebrated as the great leader of opposition for the whole course of his political life, with the exception of the short intervals in which his party succeeded in getting into the places they so eagerly panted after. At the time of his death, he was at the head of the administration which obtained the name of "All the Talents." His principal works, as an author, are, 1. Several poems which were inserted in the 'Musæ Etonenses,' &c. 2. "A Letter to the Electors of Westminster," which passed through 13 editions within a few months. 3. "A sketch of the character of the late most noble Francis, duke of Bedford, as delivered in his introductory speech to a motion for a new writ for Tavistock, on the 16th of March, 1802," which report says is the only speech of his of which he ever attempted to make a copy. 4. "A History of the early part of the Reign of James II, with an introductory chapter." [Vide Plate IX.]

Fox (Her.) the name of a family of Farley, in Wiltshire, which have made themselves memorable in history within the two last centuries, and enjoy the peerage in two branches. Stephen Fox, the eldest son of sir Stephen above-mentioned, was, in consideration of his father's services, and his own merits, created in 1741 a peer of this realm by the style and title of lord Ilchester, of Ilchester, co. Somersetshire, and baron Strangeways, of Woodford Strangeways, co. Dorset; in 1741 he received the additional dignity of a baron of this realm by the style and title of lord Ilchester and Stavordale, baron of Redlynch, co. Somerset; and in 1756 he was raised to the dignity of an earl by the title of earl of Ilchester. [Vide Ilchester.] Henry, his younger brother, and the second son of sir Stephen Fox, was in 1763 raised to the peerage by the style and title of lord Holland, baron of Foxley, co. Wilts.

Fox, John (Biog.) an English divine and historian, was born at Boston, in Lincolnshire, in 1517, and died in 1587, leaving, 1. 'De Censura, seu Excommunicatione Ecclesiastica, interpellatio ad Archiepiscopum Cantuariensem,' 8vo. 1551. 2. 'Tabulæ de Grammatica,' 1552; 3. 'Articuli, sive Aphorismi aliquot Joannis Wiclevi sparsim aut ex variis illius Opusculis excerpti per adversarios Papicolas, ac Concilio Constantiensi exhibiti.' 4. 'Collectaneæ quædam ex Reginaldi Pocockii Episcopi Cicestriensis opusculis exustis conservatæ,' &c. 5. 'Opistographia ad Oxonienses.' The three last printed with his 'Commentarii rerum in Ecclesia gestarum,' 8vo. Argentorati, 1554. besides many other works after the Reformation. But that of which he is best known is his 'Acts and Monuments,' otherwise called 'Fox's Book of Martyrs,' which was first published in one thick folio volume in 1563, entitled 'Acts and Monuments of these latter and perilous days, touching matters of the Church, wherein are comprehended and described the great persecutions and horrible troubles that have been wrought and practised by the Roman prelates in this realm of England and Scotland, &c.' It was afterwards enlarged first to two, and at length to three volumes folio, embracing a history of the Christian church from the earliest times, and in every part of the world. The ninth edition appeared in 1684. Fox left two sons, Samuel, afterwards fellow of Magdalen college, Oxford, and author of his father's life; and Thomas, fellow of King's College, Cambridge, and physician in London. [Vide Plate XXV.]

Fox, George, the first preacher of the sect called Quakers, was born at Drayton in the Clay, in Leicestershire, in 1624; and, after suffering imprisonment, and other hardships at different times for his eccentricities, he died in 1706. Although he was illiterate, yet he wrote much on the subjects which had taken possession of his mind.

Fox DE MORZILLO, Sebastian, a Spaniard, originally of the family of Foix, in Aquitaine, was born at Seville in 1528, and was drowned, as he was passing from Louvain to Spain, in the flower of his age, leaving, 1. 'De Studii philosophici ratione,' of which there is an edition joined to Nunnusius 'De recte conficiendo curriculo philosophico,' 8vo. Lugd. Bat. 1621. 2. 'De Usu et Exercitatione Dialectica,' and 'De Demonstratione,' 8vo. Basil. 1556. 3. 'In Topica Ciceronis paraphrasis et scholia,' 8vo. Antv. 1550. 4. 'De Naturâ Philosophiæ, seu de Platonis et Aristotelis Consensione, Libri quinque,' 8vo. Lovan. 1554, and often reprinted. 5. 'De Juventute atque de Honore,' Basil. 6. 'Compendium Ethicæ,' &c. 8vo. Basil. 1554. 7. 'De conscribendâ Historiâ,' 8vo. Antv. and Paris. 1557, and Antv. 1564, &c.

FOXFORD, Baron (Her.) an English title enjoyed by the earl of Limerick.

FRACASTORIO (Biog.) or Fracastoro, Jerome, an Italian poet and physician, was born at Verona in 1483, and died in 1559. Of his poetry are now extant the three books of 'Siphili, sive de Morbo Gallico,' a book of miscellaneous poems, and two books of poems entitled 'Joseph.' He wrote in prose, treatises in the form of conversations 'De Anima' dialogus, which he denominated Fracastorius; 'De Potentia,' entitled Naugerius, and 'De Intellectione,' entitled Trius, from the name of the speakers; also some medical treatises, as 'De Sympathia et Antipathia,' 'De Contagione et contagiosis morbis,' &c. His works have been printed separately and collectively, but the best edition of them collectively is that of Padua, 2 vols. 4to. 1785.

FRACHETA, Jerom (Biog.) a political writer, and native of Rovigno, in the 16th century, gained great reputation by his political works, as, 1. 'Il Seminario di Governi di Stato et di Guerra,' of which a third edition was printed at Venice in 164 and 4to. Genoa, 1648. To an edition published by the writer in 1597, was added a piece entitled 'Il Principe.' 2. 'Discorso della Regione di Stato.' 3. 'Esposizione di tutte l'Opere di Lucrezio.'

FRAGUIER, Claude Francis (Biog.) a French writer of a noble family of Paris, was born in 1666, and died in 1728. His works consist of Latin poems and dissertations. His poems were published in 12mo. Paris, 1729, with the poems of Huet, under the care of the Abbe d'Olivet, with an eulogium of the author prefixed, and three Latin dissertations subjoined. His other dissertations were printed in the Memoirs of the French Academy.

FRANCE (Geog.) one of the principal countries of Europe, the ancient name of which may be found under the head of Gallia.

Boundaries, Extent, and Division.—France is bounded on the N. by the English Channel and the Netherlands, E. by Germany, Switzerland, and Italy, S. by the Mediterranean Sea and Spain, and W. by the Atlantic Ocean. It lies between the 43d and 51st degrees of N. latitude, and its extent from the Pyrenees in the S., to Dunkirk in the N., is about 625 miles, but it is something more from the most easterly part of Alsace to the most western point of Bretagne, which province extends above 100 miles into the ocean, beyond any other part of the country. It has undergone an entire change in its division since the revolution, of which the following comparative table will furnish the best information:

Ancient Provinces.	Departments.
Flanders.....	Of the North.
Artois.....	Pas de Calais.
Picardy.....	Somme.
Normandy.....	Lower Seine, Calvados, La Manche, Orne, and Eure.
Ile of France.....	Seine, Seine and Oise, Seine and Marne, and of the Aisne.
Champagne.....	Marne, Ardenné, Aube, and Upper Marne.
Lorraine.....	Meuse, Moselle, Meurthe, Vosges.
Alsace.....	Upper Rhine, Lower Rhine.
Britany.....	Ille and Villaine, Côtes du Nord, Finesterré, Mor- bihar, Lower Loire.
Maine.....	Mayenne, Sarthe.
Anjou.....	Maine and Loire.
Touraine.....	Indre and Loire.
The Orleannois.....	Loiret, Eure and Loire, Loire and Cher.
Berry.....	Indre and Cher.
Nivernois.....	Nievre.
Burgundy.....	Cote d'Or, Saone and Loire, Ain.
Franche Comte.....	Upper Saone, Doubs, Jura.
Poitou.....	Vendée, two Sèvres, Vi- enne.
La Marche.....	Creuse, Upper Vienne.
Limousin.....	Correze.
Bourbonnois.....	Alleir.
Saintonge and Angou- mois.....	Charente.

Lyonnais.....	Rhine, Loire.
Dauphiny.....	Isère, Upper Alps, Drome.
Guienne.....	Dordogne, Gironde, Lot and Garonne, Lot, Tarn and Garonne, Avey- ron, Gers, Landes, Upper Pyrenees.
Bearn.....	Lower Pyrenees.
County of Foix.....	Arriège.
Rouquillon.....	Eastern Pyrenees.
Languedoc.....	Of the Upper Garonne, Aude, Tarn, Herault, Gard, Lozère, Upper Loire, Ardeche.
Provence.....	Lower Alps, Mouths of the Rhone, Var.
County of Venaissin..	Vaucluse.
Corsica.....	Corsica.

Chief Towns.—The chief towns, given according to the extent of their population, are Paris, Marseilles, Lyons, Bordeaux, Rouen, Nantes, Lisle, Strasburg, Toulouse, Metz, Nîmes, Amiens, Caen, Montpellier, Clermont in Auvergne, Rheims, Toulon, Angers, Nancy, Rennes, Besançon, Troyes, Aix, Dunkirk, Versailles, Brest, Montauban, Avignon, L'Orient, Tours, Grenoble, Poitiers, Limoges, Havre de Grace, St. Omer, Dieppe. The population of Paris is estimated at upwards of 700,000, and that of Dieppe at 20,000 inhabitants.

Mountains, Islands, and Rivers.—The mountains of France, besides the Alps and the Pyrenees, are the Cevennes, which the ancients named Gebennæ, Mont Jura, towards Switzerland, and Mount de Vosges, near the diocese of Langres, &c. The islands in the ocean are Belle-Isle, on the coast of Britany; Noir-moutier, on that of Poitou; Re and Oleron, on the coasts of Aunis and la Saintonge; and those in the Mediterranean are Hieres, If, Saint-Marguerite, and Saint-Honorat, on the coasts of Provence. The great rivers are the Loire, Rhone, Garonne, and the Seine. The Loire receives the Allier, Cher, Vienne, Mayenne, &c. The Rhone receives the Seine, Isère, &c.; Garonne receives the Tarn, Lot, Dordogne, &c.; and the Seine receives the Yonne, Marne, Oise, Eure, &c.

History of France.

Political History.—France, which in the time of the Romans was a division of Gaul, [vide Gallia] derives its name from the Franks, a German tribe, who first gained possession of this country, and were so called either from the German frank, free, to denote their love of liberty, or from Franconia, their original place of residence. Some writers make Pharamond their first king, but no authentic account of the French monarchy can be given before the reign of Clodion, who begun to reign about 414, whose son Meroveus, founded the first race or dynasty termed Merovingian, which terminated at the death of Childeric III, and was succeeded after an interregnum of five years, by the second race called Carolingian, which commenced with the reign of Pepin the Short, in 752, and terminated with the death of Louis V in 983. The third race, originally called Capetian, but now known by that of the Bourbon race, commenced with the reign of Hugh Capet in 987. The following is a list of the French kings, in chronological succession, as far as it can be collected from the conflicting accounts of historians:

Of the first or Merovingian Race.

The murder of this last king in 1793, completed a revolution which was attended with atrocities unparalleled in the annals of History. One violent change quickly succeeded another, which placed the government in different hands until the accession of Bonaparte, successively as first consul and emperor; but his downfall, finally completed by the battle of Waterloo in 1815, re-established the Bourbon family on the throne of their ancestors in the person of Louis XVIII, the brother of the murdered monarch, who died in 1824, when he was succeeded by his brother, Charles X.

Ecclesiastical History.—Christianity was introduced into Gaul by the disciples of the apostles, and it is asserted by some authors, that many churches were founded there in the reign of Decius, as the church of Toulouse; by S. Saturninus; that of Tours, by S. Gratian; that of Paris, by S. Denis; that of Clermont, by S. Austremoine; and that of Limoges, by S. Martial. They were afterwards destroyed in the persecutions of the pagan emperors, but rebuilt by Constantine. They were destroyed a second time on the irruption of the barbarians, but were again re-established by Clovis, the first Christian king, who endowed them richly. The Gallican church has steadily adhered to the see of Rome, amidst all the changes and fluctuations which have taken place in other parts of Europe, nor has it deviated from this course in any respect beyond what the exigency of circumstances required. After the religious wars of the 16th century, which desolated this country for some time, Protestantism was tolerated by the kings of France until the time of Louis XIV, who by the revocation of the edict of Nantes in 1685, drove many Frenchmen from their country, but established the Romish religion more firmly. Toleration was again introduced at the revolution, and has since been confirmed on the re-establishment of the monarchy. The ecclesiastical division of the country was formed into 18 archbishoprics, and 113 suffragans, exclusive of Avignon, Carpentras, Cavaillon, and Vaison.

Authors who have written on France.—Among those giving a geographical description of France, are Postel, in 1550, and 1570; Ligorius, in 1558; Jolivet, in 1565; Thevetius 1575; Belleforest, in 1575; Paul Merula, in 1605; Pontan, in 1606; Villamont, in 1608; Turquet, in 1618; Erpenius, in 1631; Daviti, in 1651; Brietius and Sanson, in 1651; Du Val, in 1682; Martineau, &c. The political history of France has been treated of by Gregory of Tours; Fredegarius, Aimonius, Sigebert, Fortunatus, Marculfus, Eginhard, Adon, Paul Diaconus, Fleuri, in his Annals, &c.; who wrote on the first and second race of the French kings. Among those who have written on the third race are Froissard, Monstrelet, Juvenal, Gui de Monceaux, Philippe de Veletes, Philippe de Commines, Paul Jovius, Guichardini, Du Bellai; Memoirs of Sulli, and others who have treated on particular periods; to which may be added the chroniclers, as Paul Emilius, Papirius, Masson, Duplex, Mezerui, Daniel, Duke d'Espernon, &c.; and those who have written on its antiquities, as Fauchet, Pasquier, P. Anselme, Du Chene, Du Tillet, Sainte Marthon, Du Ferron, &c. Collections of the principal historians of France have been made by du Chesne, and also by the Benedictines. The principal writers on the ecclesiastical history, P. le Cointe, M. Greulotte, P. Longueval, but more particularly Sainte Marthe, in his Gallia Christiana, Baronius, and M. Fleury. The literary history of France may be learnt from the 'Bibliothèques' of de la Croix, of du Verdier-Vauprivais; of Soral, but above all, of P. Le Long.

FRANCESCA, Pietro Della (Biog.) a painter of Borgo, in Umbria, otherwise called Francesco Dal Borgo san Sepolcro, was born in 1872, and died in 1458. The principal work of Francesca, was a night scene, in which he represented an angel carrying a cross.

FRANCESCHINI, Marc Antonio (Biog.) an historical painter, was born at Bologna in 1648, and died in 1729, after having acquired a considerable reputation in his day.

FRANCFORT (Geog.) or Frankfort on the Maine, a town of Germany, situated on the Maine, about 20 miles above its influx into the Rhine, 20 m. E. N. E. Mentz, 50 S. E. Cologne. Lon. 8° 30' E., lat. 50° 7' N.

History of Francfort.

Francfort, called in Latin Francofurtum, is supposed to owe its name to the French, to whom it served as a passage into Germany even before the sixth century. It was greatly enlarged by Charlemagne, after he had defeated the Saxons on the banks of the Maine, and was afterwards the place appointed for the election of the emperors. It was besieged twice by Maurice, elector of Saxony, in 1552, and afterwards by Albert, marquis of Brandenburg, but it recovered its liberty, and in 1680 received the king of Sweden within its walls. Its freedom and independence experienced an interruption from Bonaparte, who kept it in his power from 1806 to 1813, during which period the French imposed heavy contributions on the inhabitants.

Ecclesiastical History.—Pepin built the church of St. Bartholomew, in Francfort, and Charlemagne assembled a council in this city in 794, at which the legates of the pope assisted, and the heresies of Elipand, of Toledo, and Felix d'Urgel, were condemned. Francfort was among the first of the German cities to embrace protestantism, and, joining in the league of Smalcalde, had its full share of the sufferings which afflicted the rest of Germany at that time. It is memorable in the annals of commerce by the fairs which are held there twice a year.

FRANCFORT ON THE ODER, a considerable town of Prussia, and capital of Middle Mark, of Brandenburg, situated on the Oder, 12 miles S. S. W. Custrin, 48 E. Berlin. Lon. 14° 30' E. lat. 52° 20' N. It suffered much during the reign of Charles IV; and in 1759 it was the scene of a sanguinary engagement between the Russians and Prussians.

FRANCHE COMTE (Geog.) or Upper Burgundy, the name of a former province of France, which comprehends the modern departments of the Doubs, Jura, and Upper Saône.

FRANCIABIGIO, Marco Antonio (Biog.) or Francia Bigio, an historical painter, was born in 1483, and died in 1524. He is chiefly known as the competitor, as well as the partner, of Andrea del Sarto, whose works may be seen together in the cloister of the Nunziata, at Florence.

FRANCIS (Hist.) the name of an emperor of Germany, two kings of France, some princes and distinguished persons.

Emperor of this Name.

FRANCIS of Lorraine, son of Leopold of Lorraine, and emperor of Germany, married Maria Theresa, the daughter of the emperor Charles VI, and was associated with his wife in the empire, and on the death of his rival, Charles VII, he was elected emperor in 1745, and died in 1765, aged 58.

Kings of France.

FRANCIS I, son of Charles of Orleans, and Louisa of Savoy, succeeded Louis XII in 1515, and died in 1547, at the age of 53, after having been engaged in almost perpetual war with the emperor Charles V, his successful rival, by whom he was defeated and taken prisoner at the battle of Pavia in 1525. He was succeeded by his son, Henry II. The effigies of this and the following king are given as in the annexed figures.

FRANCIS II, succeeded his father, Henry II, on the throne of France in 1559, and died after a reign of 17 months, leaving Mary, queen of Scots, his widow. He was succeeded by his brother, Charles IX.

Princes and Distinguished Persons of this Name.

FRANÇOIS, king of Navarre, son of Gaston de Foix V, succeeded his grandmother, Eleonora, in 1479, and died in 1482, of poison.

FRANCIS I, duke of Britany, succeeded his father, Charles VI, in the duchy of Britany; assisted Charles VIII, of France, against the English, and died in 1450.

FRANCIS II, succeeded Richard as duke of Britany in 1458, and died in 1488, after having made a league with the English, and assisted the malcontents against Charles VIII.

FRANCIS of Bourbon, count of Vendome, attended Charles VIII in his conquest of Naples, where he fought valiantly, and died in 1496.

FRANCIS of Bourbon, son of the preceding, was at the fatal battle of Pavia, where he was taken prisoner, but having found means to make his escape, he was afterwards appointed to the government of Dauphiny, and died in 1545.

FRANCIS, dauphin and duke of Britany, son of Francis I, was born in 1518, crowned duke of Britany in 1532, and poisoned by the count de Montecuculi in 1536; for which the latter was condemned to be torn in pieces by four horses.

FRANCIS of Bourbon, count of Anguien, gave such proofs of his valour and conduct as to obtain the confidence of Francis I, king of France, by whom he was employed in Italy, and after obtaining signal advantages over the enemy, he was killed in 1545, at the age of 27.

FRANCIS of France, duke of Alençon, Anjou, and Brabant, fifth son of Henry II, was born in 1554, and died in 1584, after having headed the malcontents against his brother, Henry III, when he ascended the throne. He is known in England as the suitor of queen Elizabeth, who received him with civility enough to flatter his vanity.

FRANCIS of Bourbon, duke of Montpensier, was sent by Henry III as ambassador into England, and being afterwards invested with the government of Poitou and Normandy, defeated the troops of the league in different engagements.

FRANCIS of Bourbon, prince of Conti, and governor of Auvergne, Paris, and Dauphiny, attached himself to Henry, king of Navarre, whom he acknowledged at the death of Henry III. He fought at the battle of Ivry, and on other occasions, and died in 1614.

FRANCIS, Louis, of Bourbon, prince of Conti, signalized himself against the Turks, in Hungary, in 1685; and afterwards served with distinction under the dauphin, at the siege of Philipsburg, and the conquest of the Palatinate, in 1688, and in all the campaigns of that time, until his death in 1709.

FRANCIS of Lorraine, duke of Guise and Aumale, was born in 1519, and assassinated in 1563, by de Meré, one of the Huguenots, as he was preparing to besiege Orleans. He and his brother, the cardinal, governed the kingdom in the time of Henry II and Francis II, when he received from the parliament the title of "the saviour of his country." He was a brave and successful warrior, and obtained great advantages over the Huguenots in 1562.

FRANCIS of Vendome, duke of Beaufort, distinguished himself during the civil wars on the side of the league; but afterwards making his peace with the king, he went against the Turks, over whom he obtained some advantages, and was killed in Candia in 1669.

FRANCIS, Sir Philip, son of Philip Francis, the poet, mentioned under Biography, was born in Ireland in 1740, and died in 1818, after having filled various offices, and distinguished himself by the virulence of his opposition to Mr. Hastings, during the vexatious proceedings instituted in parliament against this gentleman.

FRANCIS, St. (Ecc.) otherwise called Francis of Assisa, founder of the Order of St. Francis, was born in 1182, and died in 1226, after having procured an extraordinary reputation for sanctity, by which he attracted an immense num-

- ber of followers. He established four orders of mendicant friars, which were confirmed by Innocent III, and was canonised by Gregory IX.
- FRANÇOIS de Paule, St. founder of the Order of Minims, was born in 1416, and died in 1507.
- FRANCIS, Xavier, St. surnamed the Apostle of Indians, was born in 1506, and died in 1552, after having laboured in the propagation of the gospel at Malacca, Japan, and the adjacent parts. He assisted Ignatius Loyola in establishing the Order of the Jesuits.

FRASCATI (Geog.) a small town of the Ecclesiastical States, 10 m. S. E. Rome. Lon. 12° 40' E. lat. 41° 40' N. in the neighbourhood of which are to be seen the ruins of the ancient Tusculum.

FRASER, Simon (Hist.) of Oliver castle, and sheriff of Peebles, being a prisoner to Edward I in 1296, engaged next year to serve him in foreign wars, but, taking up arms afterwards against this king, he was, on the defeat of Robert of Scotland, ordered to be executed by Edward I in 1306.

FRASER, Sir Simon, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, saved the life of Robert Bruce three several times, and remounted him at the battle of Methven, for which act of valour and fidelity he had the three crowns quartered into his armorial bearings. He died fighting valiantly at the battle of Duplin in 1332, after having married lady Mary Bruce, sister of king Robert I.

FRASER, Simon, of Lovat, a near relation to the preceding, and ancestor to the lords Lovat, fell at the battle of Halidon-Hill in 1333.

FRASER, Simon, vide Lovat.

FRASER, Hon. Simon, son of the 12th lord Lovat, who was executed on a charge of high treason, was unwillingly drawn by his father to take part in the rebellion of 1745, but surrendered himself in 1746, and, being released after a short confinement, gave numerous proofs of his loyalty and fidelity, and obtained a reversal of the forfeiture of his estates. He died in 1782, being then a lieutenant-general in the army.

FRASER (Her.) the name of an ancient family in Scotland, which is supposed to be of Celtic and Gaelic origin, and was early distinguished in history. This family has enjoyed the peerage in two branches. The oldest branch, descended from sir Simon Fraser, who fell at Duplin, as above-mentioned, enjoys at present the dignity and title of lord Saltoun, or Salton, which was conferred as early as 1440, or 1445, and was afterwards confirmed to sir Alexander Fraser, grandson to the 11th lord Saltoun, by king Charles I. The Frasers of Lovat, a junior branch of this family, also enjoyed the title of lord Lovat, which was conferred on Hugh Fraser above-mentioned, who was created lord of Parliament by James I. This title was forfeited in 1746, on the execution of the 12th lord Lovat. [Vide Lovat] From Alexander, second son to lord Hugh Fraser, of Lovat, descended sir William Fraser, who was created a baronet in 1806. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth azure, three cinquefoils argent, for Fraser; second and third argent, three antique crowns gules.

Crest. On a wreath of the colours, a buck's head erased gules.

A translation of Palladio's architecture, Paris, 1650; reprinted at the Hague in 1726. 3. 'Parallèle de l'Architecture Antique avec la Moderne,' fol. Paris, 650, and 1702, which was translated into English by Evelyn, as before-mentioned. FREDEGARIUS (Biog.) surnamed the Scholastic, the earliest French historian after Gregory of Tours, flourished in the seventh century, and wrote a chronicle which extends as far as 641, and is to be found in the 'Scriptores Rer. Franc.' of Du Chesne and Bouquet.

FREDEGONDE (Hist.) third wife of Chilperic I, died in 597, after having caused the death of many of the royal family, and at length procured the assassination of her husband that she might indulge her criminal passion for Landri, mayor of Paris, to king Clotaire II.

FREDERIC (Hist.) the name of some emperors, kings, and princes.

Emperors of this Name.

FREDERIC I, surnamed Barbarossa, was born in 1121, ascended the imperial throne in 1155, after his uncle Conrad III, and died in 1190, in consequence of bathing in the river Cydnus, after having distinguished himself in the Holy Land against Saladin and the Turks. He was succeeded by his son Henry VI. [Vide Plate II]

FREDERIC II, grandson of the preceding, was elected emperor of Germany on the excommunication of Otho IV by Innocent III, obtained peaceable possession of his power after the death of his rival in 1218, was solemnly crowned by Honorius III in 1220, and died in 1250, at the age of 57. After having rendered himself formidable in the Holy Land against Saladin, he was embroiled with the popes Gregory IX and Innocent IV, by the latter of whom he was formally deposed, and his power thereby materially shaken. He was succeeded by his son Conrad. The effigies of this and the following princes are given as in the annexed figures.

FREDERIC III, surnamed the Fair, was elected emperor in 1314 by some of the electors in opposition to Louis of Bavaria, who had the majority. The battle of Mischeldorf in 1322, which put him into the power of his rival, terminated the contest, after which he lived until 1330.

FREDERIC IV, surnamed the Pacific, ascended the imperial throne in 1440, was crowned at Rome in 1452 by Nicholas V, being the last of the German princes who submitted to that ceremony, and died in 1493, after a reign of 53 years, during which his empire was torn by the dissensions of his rebellious subjects. He was succeeded by Maximilian I.

FREDERIC of Brunswick, was elected emperor in 1400, and assassinated a month after by Henry, count of Waldeck, at the instigation of John, archbishop of Mentz.

Kings of Naples and Sicily.

FREDERIC I, the same as the emperor Frederic II.

FREDERIC II of Arragon, brother of James II, was made king of Sicily, and died in 1337, after a reign of 24 years, during which he maintained a war against Charles II, king of Naples. His effigy is given on his coins, as in the annexed figure. He is sometimes styled Frederic III, because he was the third king of the family of Arragon that reigned over Sicily.

FREDERIC III, surnamed the Simple, succeeded his brother Lewis on the throne of Sicily in 1457, and died after a reign of 11 years.

FREDERIC IV, son of Ferdinand, succeeded his nephew, Ferdinand II, on the throne of Naples and Sicily in 1496, and died in 1504. His effigy is given as in the annexed figure.

Kings of Denmark.

FREDERIC I, surnamed the Pacific, was elected in the place of his nephew, Christian II, who was expelled on account of his cruelties. He distinguished himself by the wisdom of his government, and by the early introduction of Lutheranism, and died in 1554.

FREDERIC II, succeeded his father Christian III in 1559, and died in 1588, at the age of 54. Tycho Brahe, and other learned men, found patronage at his court.

FREDERIC III, archbishop of Bremen, and second son of Christian IV, succeeded his father in 1648, and died in 1670, at the age of 61. He made the crown of Denmark hereditary.

FREDERIC IV, succeeded his father, Christian V, in 1699, and died in 1730, at the age of 56, after having been engaged with the czar Peter, and the king of Poland, against Charles XII of Sweden.

FREDERIC V, grandson of the preceding, succeeded to the throne of Denmark in 1746, and died after a reign of 20 years.

Kings of Poland.

FREDERIC AUGUSTUS I, son of George III, elector of Saxony, succeeded to the electorate in 1694, elected king of Poland in 1696, and died in 1733, in the 63d year of his age, after having been stripped of his dominions by Charles XII, and recovered them again on the defeat of the Swedes at Pultowa.

FREDERIC AUGUSTUS II, son of the preceding, succeeded his father in 1734, and died in 1763, after having been deprived of a part of his dominions by the king of Prussia.

Kings of Sweden.

FREDERIC, prince of Hesse-Cassel, and king of Sweden, was born in 1676, married Ulrica Eleonora, sister of Charles XII of Sweden, in 1715, obtained possession of the throne, in conjunction with the queen, in 1720, and died in 1751, after having made war upon the Russians.

Electors of Brandenburg and Kings of Prussia.

FREDERIC WILLIAM, surnamed the Great, was born in 1620, and died in 1688, after having governed his dominions with great wisdom. He was succeeded by his son, FREDERIC I, king of Prussia, and elector of Brandenburg, died in 1713, aged 60, after having erected his dominions into a kingdom. He founded the University of Halle.

FREDERIC WILLIAM I, succeeded his father, and died in 1740, aged 52. He unwillingly entered into a war with Charles XII of Sweden, from whom he took Stralsund.

FREDERIC II, son of the preceding, was born in 1712, ascended the throne of Prussia in 1740, and died in 1786, after having been engaged for the greater part of his reign in warfare. In the war called the Seven Years' War, he had Austria, France, Russia, and Sweden as his opponents; but, with the assistance of England, he succeeded in making a peace in 1762, which confirmed him in the possession of Silesia. He was afterwards one of the parties in the dismemberment of Poland. His works, as an author, amount to 19 vols. 8vo.; among which his poetical pieces, with the exception of his poem on the Art of War, passed through many editions under the title of 'Euvres mêlées du Philosophe de Sans Souci.' But all the works published in his life, both in prose and verse, were collected in 4 vols. 8vo. in 1790, under the title of 'Euvres primitives de Frederic II, Roi de Prusse, ou Collection des Ouvrages qu'il publia pendant son Règne,' containing his 'Anti Machiavel,' 'Memoirs of the House of Brandenburg,' &c. His posthumous works in 15 vols. 8vo. were published as early as 1788, containing a 'History of his own Time to the year 1745;' 'History of the Seven Years' War,' &c.

Other Princes of this Name.

FREDERIC, duke of Suabia, son of the emperor Frederic Barbarossa, accompanied his father to the Holy Land, where he distinguished himself against the Saracens; and, while engaged in the siege of Ptolemais, he died of the plague in 1190.

FREDERIC, surnamed the Wise, elector of Saxony, refused the imperial throne, which he might have ascended, and supported the election of Charles IV. He was one of the principal promoters of the reformation, and died in 1526.

FREDERIC V, elector of Palatine, son of Frederic IV, married a daughter of James I of England, was elected 1619, king of Bohemia, but was successfully opposed by Ferdinand of Austria, and died in 1632.

FREDERIC, Colonel, son of Theodore, the unfortunate king of Corsica, came to England as agent to the elector of Wirtemberg; but, being overwhelmed in debt, he shot himself through the head in 1796 in the portal of Westminster abbey. He wrote 'Memoires pour servir à l'Histoire de Corse,' 8vo. 1768; and 'Description de Corse,' 8vo. 1798, &c.

FREDERICK (Her.) the name of a family which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1723 on sir John Frederick; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Or, on a chief azure, three doves argent.

Crest. On a chapeau azure, turned up ermine, a dove, as in the arms, on an olive branch proper.

FREDERICKSHALL (Geog.) a town of Norway, situated on the frontier of Sweden, 50 miles N. Uddevalla, and 52 S. S. E. Christiania. Lon. 11° 3' E. lat. 59° 4' N. It is celebrated in history for the sieges which it has sustained at different times by means of its steep and almost impregnable fortress of Fredericksteen. It made a gallant resistance to the attack of the Swedes in 1665, in consequence of which its name was changed from Halden to Frederickshall; but it has since become still more memorable by the death of Charles XII, who was killed in the trenches before this place in 1718.

FREEMANTLE, Sir Thomas (Hist.) an admiral, commenced his naval career in 1777, at the age of 12, and died in 1820, after a series of exploits which placed him in the first rank of his profession.

FREGOSO (Hist.) an illustrious family of Genoa, many of whom rose to the post of doge.

FREGOSO, Dominic, was elected doge in 1370 in the place of Gabriel Adorno, who was displaced by his intrigues. He was very successful in adding to the territories of Genoa by the capture of several islands in the Mediterranean.

FREGOSO, Peter, brother of the preceding, was a great military commander, but fell under the displeasure of the people, by whom he was imprisoned.

FREGOSO, James, son of Dominic, was made doge in 1390, but was deposed the next year. He left four sons, who all held the highest offices in the state.

- FREGOSO, Thomas, son of the preceding, was elected doge in 1415, and kept this post until 1421, notwithstanding the opposition of the Adorni, by whom he was, for a time, expelled. He afterwards regained his power, but was again expelled to make way for a new form of government, consisting of eight persons.
- FREGOSO, John, intrigued with the court of France to procure his election to the post of doge in 1447, and died in 1448.
- FREGOSO, Louis, his brother, was chosen in his place, but deposed in 1450.
- FREGOSO, Peter, his nephew, succeeded him, and governed until 1458, when he submitted to the French.
- FREGOSO, Spinetta, was elected doge in 1459, and expelled the same month, when Louis was re-established.
- FREGOSO, Baptiste, vulgarly called Fulgoso, son of Peter Fregoso above-mentioned, was elected doge in 1478, and deposed in 1483, through the intrigues of his uncle, Paul Fregoso, who procured his own election in his stead. He was banished to Tregui, where he wrote, 'De Dictis Factisque Memorabilibus Collectanea,' originally written in Italian, but translated into Latin by Camillo Ghilini, fol. Mediol. 1508, frequently reprinted in 8vo. at Paris, Basle, Antwerp, and Cologne. The best editions are those of Paris, 1578 and 1584, accompanied with the notes of Guillard. He also wrote 'La Vita de Martino V;' a work on Learned Women, and a treatise against love, entitled 'Anteros.'
- FREGOSO, John, was elected in 1512, but deposed by his rivals, the Adorni, the next year, but the people declared for the former family.
- FREGOSO, Octavian, grandson of Louis, was elected doge in 1513, and governed the state with much prudence until 1522, when the city was taken and pillaged by the marquis de Pescara, general of the armies of the emperor Charles V.
- FREGOSO, John Maria, commanded the troops of the republic in 1527, and his son Caesar signalized himself on different occasions in the service of Francis I; and others of this family were afterwards in the service of his successors.
- FREGOSO, Paul (Ecc.) cardinal and archbishop of Genoa, the brother of Peter Fregoso before-mentioned, was promoted to the see of Genoa through the influence of his brother in 1452, obtained the cardinal's hat from Sixtus IV in 1480 through the interest of his nephew, the doge, whom he afterwards caused to be deposed and exiled, and died in 1499, after having been guilty of intrigues highly disgraceful to his character.
- FREGOSO, Frederic, a cardinal and archbishop of Salerno, was created a cardinal by Paul III in 1539, and died in 1541; after having been sent as ambassador from the republic of Genoa to pope Leo X, and afterwards commanded a naval armament against the Turks and Barbary corsairs. When Genoa was pillaged by the Spaniards in 1522, the cardinal fell into the sea as he was making his escape to the French vessels, and was in great danger of being drowned.
- FREHER, Marquard (Biog.) a German, descended from a learned family at Augsburg, was born in 1565, and died in 1614. His principal works are, 1. 'Rerum Germanicarum Scriptores,' 3 vols. fol. 1600, 1611. 2. 'Rerum Bohemicarum Scriptores,' fol. 1602. 3. 'De Re monetaria veterum Romanorum,' 4to. Lugd. Bat. 1605; inserted by Grævius in his Thesaurus, vol. ii. 4. 'De Inquisitionis Processu.' 5. 'Origines Palatine.' 6. 'Corpus Historiæ Franciæ,' &c.
- FREHRE, Paul, a physician of Noriberg, who was born in 1611, and died in 1682, is known as the author of the 'Thestrum Virorum Eruditione singulari clarorum,' 2 vols. fol. Norib. 1688.
- FREIGIUS (Biog.) or Frey, Thomas, a German of Friburg, who died of the plague in 1583, was the author of, 1. 'Questiones Geometricæ et Stereometricæ.' 2. 'Logica Consiliorum.' 3. A supplement to the history of Paulus Emilius and Ferron; as far as the year 1596. 4. 'Ciceronis Orationes,' 3 vols. 8vo. Basil. 1583.
- FREIND, Robert (Biog.) an English divine, and a Latin poet, was born in 1667, educated at Westminster, and at Christ Church, Oxford, and died in 1751, leaving a number of poems in Latin and English, which are inserted in Mr. Nichols' collection.
- FREIND, John, younger brother of the preceding, a physician and medical writer, was born at Croton, in Northamptonshire, in 1675; educated under Busby at Westminster, and at Christ Church, Oxford; and died in 1728, leaving among his works, 1. 'An Account of the Earl of Peterborough's Conduct in Spain, chiefly since the raising the Siege of Barcelona,' 1706; to which is added 'The Campaign of Valencia,' with original papers, 8vo. 1707, and a third edition in 1708. 2. 'Prælectiones Chymicæ,' &c. Oxon. 1709; to which objections were made by the German physicians, and a reply was published in Latin in the Philosophical Transactions, and added, by way of Appendix, to the second edition of the 'Prælectiones.' 3. 'Hippocrates de Morbis Popularibus,' 1716; to which he added a 'Commentary on Fevers.' 4. 'The History of Physic, from the time of Galen to the beginning of the sixteenth Century,' &c.; the first part published in 1725, and the second the year following; besides which he was concerned in an edition of Æschines and Demosthenes 'De Corona,' and revising the Delphin edition of 'Ovid's Metamorphoses,' and some medical treatises, particularly one entitled 'Emmenologia,' &c. published in 8vo. 1703.
- FREINSHMIUS, John (Biog.) a classical editor of Ulm, in Suabia, was born in 1608, and died in 1660, leaving editions of 'Florus,' 8vo. 1632; 'Tacitus,' 1638 and 1664; 'Quintus Curtius,' 2 vols. M. F. MARCEL. Q. FULVI. M. F. F.; i. e. Marcus Claudius, Marci Filius Marcellus, Quintus Fulvius, &c. The ordinary types on these coins are a head of Rome galeated; a Victory in a chariot; a triumphal chariot, with a Victory crowning the person who is in it; the Dioscuri riding with their spears; sometimes the simpulum, lituus, and other sacred utensils, emblematical of the priest's office, &c. Golt. Fast.; Vaillant. et Morell. Famil. &c.

FUEVIA (Hist.) an ambitious woman, the wife of Mark Anthony, who, finding all her intrigues to fail, and herself neglected by her husband, died A. C. about 40. Patere. l. 2; Plut. in Cic. et Anton.; Flor. l. 4.

FULVIA, Marcia, the second wife of Titus, from whom he was afterwards divorced.

FULVIA, Plantilla, vide Plantilla.

FULVIUS CURVUS, L. (Hist.) a consul, U. C. 432, A. C. 322, obtained a triumph over the Samnites, whom he afterwards totally defeated.

FULVIUS MAXIMUS CENTUMALUS, Cn. a consul, U. C. 456, A. C. 298, with L. Cornelius Scipio, defeated the Samnites, over whom he obtained a triumph, and afterwards gained considerable victories over the Illyrians and others.

FULVIUS, M. second son of M. Fulvius Curvus, and brother of the preceding, obtained the consulship, U. C. 455, A. C. 299, and was colleague with T. Manlius Torquatus. He took by surprise the city of Nequinum, in Umbria.

FULVIUS MAXIMUS, Cn. nephew of the preceding, was dictator, U. C. 490, A. C. 264, and reduced Corsica, defeated the Illyrians, and obtained other victories.

FULVIUS FLACCUS, M. a consul, and colleague with Appius Claudex, U. C. 490, A. C. 264, was a victorious general during, and after, his consulship.

FULVIUS NOBILIOR, Ser. a consul, and colleague with Æmilius Paulus, who, after having obtained many advantages over the Carthaginians, perished in a shipwreck with nearly 200 vessels.

FULVIUS FLACCUS, Q. one of the most celebrated commanders in his time, was four times consul, namely, U. C. 517, A. C. 237, and U. C. 530, 542, and 545, during which time he obtained victories over the Gauls, and the inhabitants of Milan and Boulogne.

FULVIUS FLACCUS, Q. son of the preceding, strangled himself after having obtained a triumph over the Celtiberi, U. C. 574, A. C. 180. Liv. l. 38, &c.

FULVIUS NOBILIOR, M. grandson of the preceding, and a consul, U. C. 561, distinguished himself in Spain, and afterwards, in his second consulship, by taking Ambracia, and subduing the Ætolians, over whom he obtained a triumph. Cic. pro Muren. c. 16; Liv. l. 33.

FULVIUS NOBILIOR, Q. his son, a consul, and colleague with Titus Annius Luscus, undertook the war against the Celtiberi. Cic. Brut. c. 20; Liv. l. 40.

FULVIUS FLACCUS, Cn. was banished for not having acquitted himself well against Annibal. Liv. l. 26.

FULVIUS FLACCUS, M. a consul, U. C. 629, A. C. 125, defeated the Ligurians, was killed by the consul Opimius for his seditious behaviour in aiding the Gracchi, and his house was levelled to the ground. Cic. pro Dom. c. 48; Plut. in Gracch.; Appian. in Bell. Civ. l. 1.

FULVIUS, a Roman senator, intimate with Augustus, who, having disclosed the emperor's secrets to his wife, and she to the other matrons of Rome, they both hanged themselves to avoid the resentment of Augustus.

FUMANI (Biog.) or Fumanus, Adam, a scholar and Latin poet of Verona, who died in 1587, was the author of several Latin poems, the chief of which was a system of Logic in verse, which were all published at Padua, with the works of Fracastorius, in 2 vols. 4to. 1739.

FUNCCIUS (Biog.) or Funck John Nicholas, a critic, was born at Marburg in 1693, and died in 1778. His treatises, 'De Origine Latine Lingue,' and 'De Pueritia Latine Lingue,' were published in 1720.

FUNCH (Hist.) Funeccius, or Funecius, John, was born at Werden, near Nuremburg, and, being convicted in some treasonable practices, he was beheaded in 1566. He wrote a Chronology, from Adam to 1560, published at separate times, and afterwards completely at Wittemberg, fol. 1570, with some other tracts, &c. He also left a Commentary on Daniel's Seventy weeks, in German, and one on the Revelation.

FURETIERE, Anthony (Biog.) a lawyer, was born at Paris in 1620, and died in 1688, leaving a 'Dictionnaire universelle de la Langue Francoise,' which was published after his death, the best edition being printed in 1690. This work served as the foundation of the 'Dictionnaire de Trevoux,' by which name it was afterwards better known.

FURIA, gens (Hist.) the name of a family which migrated from Medullia to Rome in the time of Romulus, was divided into patricians and plebeians, and distinguished by the surnames of Aculeo, Bibaculus, Crassipes, Camillus, Lusci, Pacilus, Philus, Purpureo, and Medullinus. The most illustrious branch of this family was that of the Camilli. [Vide Camillus]

FURIA, gens (Numis.) medals, or coins, are extant of the Purpureones, Crassipides, Philii, and Camilli, of this family, as may be learnt from the inscriptions:—PUR.—L. PURPUREON.—P. FOURIUS.—CRASSIPE.—P. FURIUS.—P. F. CAMILLUS.—P. FURIUS. CN. F. PHILUS, &c. The types on these coins are either the ordinary figure of Roma helmeted, or a Victory in a chariot, a head of Ceres, or a curule chair, for a curule ædile, a head of Jupiter Capitolinus, &c.; but one medal bears on the obverse, as in the annexed cut, the figure of Roma helmeted and habited in the stola, bearing in her left a spear, and with her right crowning a trophy, at the bottom of which are the two gallic shields, to commemorate the victory of this Furius Philus over the Gauls, U. C. 530.

FURIAE (Myth.) Furies, the daughters of Nox and Acheron, of whom there were said to be three, namely, Alecto, Tisiphone, and Megara, which were called Diræ in heaven, Eumenides in the lower regions, and Furiæ on earth. They were supposed to be the ministers of the vengeance of the gods, and therefore appeared stern and inexorable. [Vide Eumenides]

FURIAE (Numis.) these deities are represented on medals, mostly as in the annexed figure; the middle one bearing a torch in both hands; that on the right, a serpent in one hand, and a key in the other; that on the left, a scourge in one hand, and a dagger in the other. Spanh. Dissertat. de Præstant. &c.; Seg. Sel. Numis.

FURIETTI, Joseph Alexander (Ecc.) an Italian cardinal and antiquary, was born of a noble family of Bergamo in 1685, created a cardinal by Clement XIII in 1759, and died in 1764, leaving 'De Musivis vel pictoriæ Mosaicæ artis origine,' 4to. Rom. 1752. He likewise collected and published the works of Gaspar Barziza, of Bergamo, and of his son Guiniforte, in 4to. 1723, with a preface and a life; also a fine edition of the poems of Fontana.

FURINA (Myth.) the goddess of robbers, worshipped at Rome. Cic. de Nat. Deor. l. 3; Varro, de Lat. Ling. l. 5; Plut. in Tib. et C. Gracch.; Fest. de Verb. Sign.

FURIUS (Hist.) vide Camillus.

FURIUS (Numis.) vide Furia, gens.

FURIUS, Antias (Biog.) an ancient Latin poet, mentioned by Aulus Gellius, and Macrobius, who is said to have written annals, &c. Only 17 verses of his poetry are extant, and inserted in the 'Corpus Poetarum Latinorum,' fol. Tom. II.

FURIUS, Bibaculus, M. a Latin poet of Cremona, whose works have been confounded with those of the preceding. Macrob. l. 6; Voss. de Poet. c. 1.

FURIUS, Frederick, surnamed Cerriolanus, a native of Valentia, in Spain, who died in 1592, was the author of, 1. 'Bononia, sive de Libris Sacris in vernaculam Linguam convertendis,' &c. 8vo. Basil, 1556. 2. 'Del Consejo y Consuevas,' which was much esteemed, and twice translated into Latin, 8vo. 1618, and 1666.

FURSTENBERG, Ferdinand de (Ecc.) a prelate, descended from a noble family in Westphalia, was born in 1626, raised to the see of Paderborn in 1661, and died in 1683, leaving among his publications, 1. 'Monumenta Paderbornensia.' 2. 'Septem Virorum illustrium Poemata,' to which he added some poems of his own, printed at Rome by himself, and afterwards reprinted at the Louvre, at the expense of the king of France.

FURSTENAU, John Herman (Biog.) a physician, was born at Helforden, in Westphalia, in 1688, and died in 1756, leaving several medical works, the most important of which was his 'Desiderata Medica,' which was frequently reprinted.

FUSLI (Biog.) vide Füssli.

FUST (Biog.) or Faust, John, a goldsmith of Ments, who died of the plague at Paris, as is supposed, in 1466, is considered as one of the first inventors of printing, the honour of which is shared with him by Guttenberg, and Schaeffer. Guttenberg has the credit of having first employed moveable metal types at Strasburg, before he came to Ments, in 1444; and Schaeffer is generally considered to have invented the method of casting the metal types in 1462. The very earliest attempt, however, at exercising this art, is ascribed to Laurence Koster, at Haerlaem, who is said to have first conceived the art of cutting wooden blocks for this purpose in 1430, which he immediately improved by substituting wooden types. It is not so easy to determine the share which Fust had in this invention, but he is known to have employed his capital in the exercise of the art. The second printed book, that bears a date entitled 'Durandi Rationale divinatorum Officiorum,' was printed by Faust and Schaeffer in 1459; the 'Catholicon' followed in 1460.

FUZELIER, Louis (Biog.) a dramatic writer of Paris, who died in 1752, was the author of many theatrical pieces, as 'Momus Fabuliste,' a comedy, 'Les Agés,' 'Les Amours des Dieux,' and other operas, &c. He also conducted the Journal entitled 'Mercure François,' with M. de Bruere.
